By CHARLES MOHR

Sept. 25—Jimmy Carter, if elected President, heither sales of nuclear power and nuclear reactor fuel to be refused to forgo nuclear development or insisted on own national plant for reactor fuel.

FORD TELLS SOUTH, 'I WANT YOUR VOTE'

Talks on Steamboat Depict Carter as a Free-Spending Liberal

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

DESTERHAN, La., Sept. 25—President Ford steamed down the Mississippi today to preach political conservatism to Jimmy Carter's native South.

"I want your vote," the President shouted from the top deck of the S.S. Natchez, an excursion steamboat, to crowds gathered on levees and ferry boat landings along 53 miles of the river.

The six-hour cruise, from upriver Lusher to Jackson Square in New Orleans, opened a three-day tour of the Deep South meant to dilute Mr. Carter's appeal in his home region by characterizing him as a free-spending liberal.

"Your President believes that the Federal Government spends much too much money," Mr. Ford declared from the deck of the two-year-old steamship that is named for 11 earlier vessels.

He contended that his brief Presidency had been marked by modest success at preventing a Democratic Congress from accelerating Government spending, and pledged that "in the next four years we'll do even better."

Although Mr. Ford's chase against Mr.

Arraignment Lag In New York City Hurting Innocent

By SELWYN RAAB

Many of the 4,000 people arrested in New York City each week are being held in police detention cells for as long as three days without a court hearing because of a breakdown in the arraignment system.

Court and law enforcement officials confirmed in recent interviews that "abnormal" delays had developed in the last month in the processing of arraignments, or the first court appearance after arrest for a criminal suspect. The slowdown has meant not only that some innocent people have been improperly held for days but also that the constitutional right to a speedy hearing is being denied to thousands of defendants.

Court records indicate that, until a month ago, all defendants were arraigned in New York City within 24 hours, often quicker.

Some court officials, including David Ross, the city's administrative judge, said that police inefficiency in getting officers and suspects to court promptly was chiefly responsible for the problem. But, other officials said a rising arrest rate, police attempts to curb overtime pay and a shortage of arraignment courts had further contributed to the delays.

"This is primarily a police-related problem,"

Poor in U.S. Rose by 2.5 Million In 1975, Most in Recent Decades

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25—The number of poor persons in the United States increased by 2.5 million in 1975, the largest rise in a single year since the Government began keeping poverty statistics in 1959.

The Bureau of the Census, in making public today its annual survey of incomes, said that the increase in the number of persons living in poverty in 1975 was "quite pervasive," extending to every group in the population.

However, the figures showed that the largest proportional increases in the number of persons living on poverty-level incomes occurred among those who do not ordinarily dominate the poverty statistics—whites, families with a male head, and those who are not elderly.

The Census report also showed that, while median family income rose by $817, to $13,729, in 1975, inflation cut the real purchasing power of the typical family by 2.6 percent.

1975 was the second consecutive year and the fourth year out of the last six in which the purchasing power of the ible Covert Union Gifts to Ford From '64 to '74 led Target of Inquiry by Watergate Prosecutor

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK

RAPIDS, Mich., Sept. 25—The special prosecutor's office is to whether funds from two time unions were "laundered" to public committees here and aid to Gerald R. Ford in the beginning in 1964, according to officials and Federal officials.

F. Ruff, the special prosecutor, began this investigation on the day after Mr. Ford was nominated Republican Presidential candidate, a subpoena for the two Republican political committees, Mich.

at the same time, according to sources, Mr. Ruff also subpoenaed records of the Marine Engineers Association. His office had reviewed through subpoena the records of the Seafarers International Union in an investigation begun in 1974.

The unions have pumped millions of dollars into political campaigns across the country to encourage support for instant-time legislation. Though Mr. Ford represented Michigan's Fifth District when he was in Congress, he received substantial support from the two unions.

What has perplexed many in the Republican leadership here is that Mr. Ruff's inquiry appears to be going over ground already covered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Internal Revenue Service and the House Judiciary Committee when Mr. Ford was appointed Vice President in 1973.

"I cannot imagine what anybody expects to find in those records," Edward McRain, Mr. Ford's personal accountant, said in an interview. "The I.R.S., the F.B.I. and the House committee people were here literally weeks going over the same materials."

Mr. Ruff's investigation appears to be concentrated on the 10 years from 1964, shortly before Mr. Ford became minority leader in the House, to 1974, when he succeeded President Nixon.

A substantial part of this period is technically outside the jurisdiction of the special prosecutor, who was appointed to investigate the Watergate burglary and political finances in 1970 and 1972. The prosecutor, however, is authorized to trace supporting evidence outside that period or to investigate an allegation of a continuing conspiracy.

During the decade following 1964, Mr.

Rockefeller University Hit by Storm Over Tenure

By ISRAEL SHENKER

At the Rockefeller University, hot-house for Nobel Prize winners, a summer storm over tenure has produced perhaps the greatest embarrassment in the institution's 75-year history.

The philosophy group—with men of world reputation—is being shut down. Logic professors—hardly less distinguished—are being encouraged to leave. Other professors are finding that their research support is being threatened.

Bearing the brunt of the storm is Dr. Frederick Seitz, the president, who is being attacked for maladroitness in forcing people out to save money. Meanwhile, David Rockefeller, chairman of the board's executive committee, has given assurances that the university has an intention of abrogating tenure.

But Prof. Donald Davidson, a philosopher, has already transferred to the University of Chicago, and his colleague, Prof. Harry G. Frankfurt, to Yale. Prof. Saul A. Kripke, a third philosopher, has offers from Harvard, Princeton and the University of California at Los Angeles.

Prof. Hao Wang, who earlier had a chair at Harvard, sees a bleak future for himself. His fellow logician, Prof. Donald A. Martin, now investigating job opportunities elsewhere, is still astonished by the university's action. "Kripke and Davidson in particular—two of the three most eminent philosophers in the English-speaking world—it's rather strange to go to so much trouble to get rid of them."

Vietnamese 'Orphans' in New Battle

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Sept. 25—A cross-country tug-of-war that will decide the fate of two children flown out of Vietnam in "Operation Babykit" during the panic-filled closing days of the Vietnam War got under way this week as attorneys for both the children's natural mother and their foster father began legal proceedings.

The battle for custody of 9-year-old Vo Huy Khan and 6-year-old Vo Anh Tuan is typical of cases beginning to crop up in state courts in the United States as refugees parents who turned their children over to orphanages and adoption agencies now ask for their children back, contending that they never meant to give them up permanently.

Lawyers and child-welfare agency officials involved with the Vietnamese estimate that 2,500 children were sickled out of Saigon in April 1975 and brought to the United States.

At least a dozen children have already been returned to their parents or other relatives voluntarily, without court suits, as the Vietnamese become settled in the United States and slowly succeeded in locating their family members behind the traditional veil of secrecy that surrounds adoptions.

In addition, courts in California, Michigan and Iowa have already ordered children returned to their Vietnamese parents.

Behind the disputes, representatives of the Vietnamese say, lies another of the cultural misunderstandings that plagued the war. The Vietnamese, they say, traditionally see adoption as something that can occur only within extended families.

TURNING POINT SEEN AHEAD FOR RHODESIA BY A BLACK LEADER

HE AVOIDS COMMENT ON PLAN

Nkomo, Returning to Huge Welcome, Says He Is in Full Command of Nationalist Movement

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 25—Joshua Nkomo, the nationalist leader who is already widely presumed to be playing a key role in the formation of a biracial interim government here, said today, "From now on we may arrive at a turning point."

Mr. Nkomo, who was greeted tumultuously by 1,200 followers when he returned after a five-month pilgrimage in search of international diplomatic backing, avoided any direct comment on the British-American proposals for a transition to black majority rule that had been so dramatically and reluctantly accepted last night by Prime Minister Ian D. Smith. The husky nationalist leader said he could not talk about the plan until he met with his top aides.

In Lusaka, Zambia, the Presidents of five black African nations around Rhodesia met to discuss the proposals announced yesterday by Mr. Smith amid increasing criticism from some black Rhodesian nationalists of the proposals, Page 3.

The proposals were denounced by the Soviet Union, Page 6. And the British Foreign Office announced that it would assign a full-time advisory team to Rhodesia to oversee the transition from white to black majority rule, Page 3.

Response Will Be Delayed

Mr. Nkomo said he would be meeting with the executive members of his African National Council and would then once again confer with the African Presidents of the five so-called frontline states—Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia—before he publicly addressed himself to the proposals.

"I do not want people to say, oh my, why are they taking so long?" he declared. "It has taken us 85 years to get where we are today. Therefore we can afford to take a few more days or a few more weeks to work out the future of our country."

The momentous reversal on the issue of majority rule that was announced on television and radio by Mr. Smith last

International

Joshua Nkomo, a Rhodesian nationalist leader told a group of supporters in Salisbury that a turning point may have been reached in Rhodesia. Mr. Nkomo, who spent five months traveling abroad in search of backing for black majority rule, is thought to be playing a key role in the formation of the interim biracial government. In his remarks, he played down reports of splits among the nationalist groups. [Page 1, Col. 6.]

Plans for an international fund to help Rhodesia make the transition to black rule will be worked out in detail by officials from the United States, Britain and South Africa. The fund, which Secretary of State Kissinger said would amount to more than a billion dollars, will be used to train blacks in skills previously denied them and to aid the Rhodesian economy. Another major purpose of the money will be to compensate whites who leave the country. [1:5.]

Black African leaders met hastily in Zambia to discuss Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's acceptance of the proposals for majority rule in Rhodesia. Publicly, the leaders of the five "front-line" nations made no comment; but Tanzanian leaders privately voiced reservations about Mr. Smith's plans for a temporary government that would leave a good deal of power in the hands of whites. Zambian officials seemed to favor the plan. [3:3-6.]

Opposition to nuclear power is gathering force throughout Western Europe and has slowed the pace of reactor building. Denmark and Norway have delayed the building of their first nuclear plants and the Netherlands has put off a decision on whether to build more plants. Public opposition has snarled utilities in West Germany and Switzerland through protracted legal skirmishes. [1:6.]

National

Sales of nuclear fuels and nuclear power technology to foreign nations would be halted under his administration, Jimmy Carter said, unless the nation agreed not to build nuclear weapons or its own fuel-reprocessing plant. The Democratic candidate said that the United States must provide leadership in an attempt to guard against nuclear weapons proliferation and accused the Ford Administration of not doing so. [1:1.]

Whistle-blowing down the Mississippi, President Ford opened a three-day campaign trip through the South. During a six-hour steamboat trip down the river to New Orleans, Mr. Ford sought to portray his Democratic opponent to deduce that Mr. Carter would spend more of the Government's money, he would, he attacked Senator F. Mondale, the Democratic nominee, as the "biggest spender in United States Senate." [1:2.]

The largest increase in the number of poor persons in the United States since the Government began keeping statistics in 1959 occurred during 1975. Bureau of the Census said the 2.5 million persons, was proportionately the largest among whites, families a male head and those not elderly. Government defined the poverty line in 1975 as an income of $3,500 for a nonfarm family of four.

An investigation into reports that ident Ford may have received from two maritime unions that had been laundered through Michigan public committees is said by FBI officials to be under way. Charles Ruff, the Watergate special prosecutor, apparently began the inquiry after Mr. Ford was nominated.

Metropolitan

Because of a breakdown in the arrest system, many of the 4,000 arrested in New York City each week have to spend up to three days in detention cell without a court hearing. Some court officials said the breakdown was caused by police inefficiency in getting arresting officers and courts to court promptly. Other officials said police attempts to cut overtime pay and a shortage of arraignment clerks contributed to the delays. [1:3.]

The Rockefeller University, whose scientists have won Nobel prizes in the last five years, has become embroiled in a dispute over tenure. Frederick Seitz, the president, has been forced by a shortage of money to close down the institution's philosophy department and has encouraged logic professors to leave. Many of the professors are angry by the actions and are afraid, despite reassurances from the executive committee chairman, David Rockefeller, that Dr. Seitz was abrogating tenure. [1:6.]

A custody case in Connecticut involving the natural mother of 23 Vietnamese children and their American adoptive parents is typical of such cases across the United States. Many of the 2,500 children, who were adopted in April 1975, are now seeking to see their children. [1:4-5.]

Quotation of the Day

"It's become so outrageous that we've had situations where, after a few days, the police couldn't find the prisoners." —Brooklyn District Attorney Eugene Gold, discussing new delays in the arraignments of prisoners. [1:6.]

Five African Leaders Gathering to Discuss Rhodesian Proposals

By JOHN DARNTON
Special to The New York Times

LUSAKA, Zambia, Sept. 25—A meeting of the so-called "front-line" African presidents was hastily convened here today amid increasing criticism from nationalists of the proposals outlined by Prime Minister Ian D. Smith for majority rule in Rhodesia.

Publicly, the five heads of state of the African countries bordering on the conflict area of southern Africa—Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia—refrained from commenting on Mr. Smith's speech last night, in which he agreed to majority rule within two years but laid out details of an interim government that would hold a good deal of power in the hands of whites.

But privately, some Government officials, especially in Tanzania, have voiced deep reservations about the proposals. Those here in Zambia, however, seemed to favor acceptance of the plan, maintaining that its features had been thoroughly explored during Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy trip last week.

The difference in views could spell a potential split among the African presidents, who up to now have made a point of maintaining a united front.

Rhodesians Criticize Plan
If the meeting ends in a common denunciation of the proposals, then hopes for a quick settlement of the Rhodesian conflict, raised only a few days ago after Mr. Kissinger's final meeting with President Julius K. Nyerere, will be dashed.

The mere fact that another "summit meeting" was being held, when President Nyerere said a few days ago that one would not be necessary, indicated the uncertainty and mixed reaction of the presidents.

Meanwhile, two feuding wings of the Rhodesian nationalists issued separate statements sharply attacking the plan.

A spokesman for Joshua Nkomo, head of the moderate internal faction of the African National Council, charged that it was unacceptable because the interim government it proposed would be controlled by Mr. Smith's ruling Rhodesian Front Party. "The proposals leave the substance of power in the hands of the minority; an interim government in which the effective control of power is with the minority cannot have the capacity to transfer to majority rule," said George Sikandire, Mr. Nkomo's press spokesman.

"Either the plan must be changed or scrapped altogether and the field left open to the armed struggle."

Mr. Nkomo was reported to have returned to Rhodesia, after an absence of four months, where he was expected to make public his opposition to the framework for settlement.

Mr. Nkomo's nationalist rival, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, head of the Zimbabwe African National Union, or ZANU, which dissolved its ties with Mr. Nkomo's group two weeks ago, was even more outspoken.

In a press statement, he charged that the proposals had the "diabolical intentions of creating a puppet regime in Zimbabwe," the nationalist name for Rhodesia, and giving Mr. Smith "a breathing space in which to consolidate his military, economic and international positions."

The reaction of Robert Mugabe, secretary general of ZANU, who has close links to the guerrillas and has emerged recently as a stronger figure than Mr. Sithole, can be expected to be at least equally harsh. Mr. Mugabe could not be reached in Mozambique today. He was reported on his way to Zambia.

Nyerere First to Arrive
President Nyerere, the chairman of the group of presidents, landed here at 3:30 P.M., the first to arrive. He was met at the airport by President Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia and promptly flown away in a helicopter to the President's lodge to begin discussions.

No public statements were made. Half an hour later, President Seretse Khama of Botswana flew in. President Agostinho Neto of Angola was scheduled to arrive later, as was President Samora Machel of Mozambique.

An Advisory Team to Aid Rhodesian Transition

By T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

Sept. 25—Britain will assign an advisory team to Rhodesia, probably within a few days, to oversee the transition from white to black rule, an official said today.

Government appears to be wary of lingering colonialism for Rhodesia, Britain is to take over, following Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's role as an adviser and possessor in easing the transition. Sir Antony Duff, a Deputy Secretary of State who is Britain's Rhodesian expert, will fly to Rhodesia to discuss the support of Rhodesia's 75,000 whites.

Confers With Nyerere
Foreign Office sources said, called President Julius K. Nyerere, to discuss Britain's of the agreement and to port. Time Minister—who is placing calls from a Blackpool, is attending a Labor Party conference trying to reach the of Rhodesia's other black hours: Angola, Botswana, Mozambique. Saint Will Be Named Sept. 25 (Reuters)—Pope Paul VI named a new Spanish saint, the 13th-century St. Peter's Basilica, in Ceuta, the Spanish enclaves on the North African coast, founded in 1495. The saint, known as the Cloistered Most Holy Immaculate Conception, died in the 15th century and died in 1202.

to consider the Rhodesian decision. Their support is believed vital to discourage guerrilla war in Rhodesia and cooperate in establishing a new government.

Britain has yet to identify the men who will head the advisory team. One possibility is Sir Antony, the principal agent behind recent British initiatives to resolve the Rhodesian affair. Other possibilities for African Affairs, Patrick Laver, head of the Foreign Office's Rhodesian desk, and Norman Aspin, Assistant Under Secretary to Sir Antony.

Two Forms of Aid Envisaged
The Foreign Office declined to estimate the amount of financial aid needed to ease the transition, but it said it was likely to be provided in two forms. One part would go to blacks for schools and agricultural development, and contributors might include West European countries along with Britain and the United States.

United States and possibly South Africa, would be granted in the form of guarantees to whites to protect them against losses if forced to leave the country.

Britain's goal is to encourage the whites to stay. Their hasty departure would cripple an economy that they still dominate. Assurance of guarantees to discourage emigration is becoming urgent. This year, for the first time, more whites have been leaving Rhodesia than settling there.

There seems to be less urgency to free Rhodesia of the economic sanctions that Britain and most other countries imposed after Prime Minister Ian D. Smith declared independence 11 years ago. Britain first wants to see a new interim government set up and working.

The sanctions are such that there is now virtually no trade between Britain and Rhodesia, "promotion of tourism to Rhodesia is banned, and Britons are not allowed to transfer British currency there. Other countries have imposed similar restraints.

Britain's embargo could end on Nov. 16, the day Parliament considers renewal of the sanctions, but by that time Rhodesia would be expected to have completed formation of the biracial interim government that would write a Constitution and begin the process of forming the black majority government to take over within two years.

might has so far been greeted with astounding poise by both blacks and whites. In light of the white-dominated Government's 11-year intransigence on the question of full black political participation, the announcement was surprising, but so far there has been no visible shedding of tears, beating of breasts or pounding of fists.

Mr. Nkomo did, however, convey the emphatic impression that he had returned from his travels to London, Paris, Moscow, Algeria, Iran, Iraq and African states, and his three meetings with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, as the clear victor who had repulsed his nationalist rivals.

"We are in complete control," he told his backers, who were happily chanting "Zi, Zi, Zi," for Zimbabwe. Mr. Nkomo said that the guerrillas massed in training camps in Mozambique were loyal to his movement. He also intimated that his chief rivals in the long nationalist squabbles, Bishop Abel Muzorewa and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, would not be taking part in the creation of the interim government that is to pave the way toward majority rule in two years.

He did, however, suggest that a newer rival, Robert Mugabe, who is said to command the guerrilla force, would be invited to participate in a new nationalist coalition that would heal the wounds of past conflicts.

Denies Existence of Splits

Throughout his talk, Mr. Nkomo said several times that talk of splits within the nationalist movement no longer applied. "But," he said, "in order to remove the image of disunity which persists, I am prepared to talk to leaders of any groups which appear to have a common position with us and which have some viability in this country." He said there appeared to be only one such group, the Zimbabwe African National Union, which more than a decade ago split from Mr. Nkomo's own Zimbabwe African People's Union.

Mr. Nkomo said that while he was in Mozambique recently, "young camps," presumably guerrilla commanders, had given him a list of leaders from this group with whom he would be meeting. He was asked if Bishop Muzorewa and the Rev. Sithole were on the list.

"Those names were conspicuous by their absence," said Mr. Nkomo.

"How about Robert Mugabe?" he was asked about the Rhodesian schoolteacher who has reportedly built a following among the guerrillas after he, alone of all the nationalist intellectuals, joined them in their camps.

"I recall his name being there," said Mr. Nkomo, grinning and looking very much like a man returning home to a victory he could not quite yet proclaim. Mr. Nkomo, who spent 10 years in prison for his political activities, was asked if he believed he would be the black chief minister in the interim government.

Says He Has No Position in Mind

"I have never had it in my mind. I will be this," he said. "I am one of the strugglers of Zimbabwe. I would not be hankering for any position."

As to the cessation of guerrilla activity, which Mr. Smith said was a precondition for the acceptance of the British-American proposals, Mr. Nkomo implied it would stop when the conditions which brought it about ended.

"The African people of this country are a peace-loving people and it was because of the situation that was created by those people who wanted to dominate others that our people were forced to this action. There is no one in this country who rejoices in war."

As if to demonstrate the calmness with which Mr. Smith's reversal of policy has been taken, today marked the opening of the Jacaranda Festival commemorating the flowering trees that splash the landscape of this immaculate city, the annual blooming of the large lavender.

Florets and Beauty Queens

The festival was opened with a parade of florets and beauty queens that moved past a happy, predominantly white crowd. The spectators cheered loudly for a white cavalry unit in full regalia, a Scottish regimental band and a black marching band.

Among the spectators was Pliat Chingwe, a black personnel officer, who said he now believed that the cynicism with which he awaited Mr. Smith's speech was misplaced. "I did not expect to hear what I heard. It was unbelievable," he said smiling. As for the future he thought it would be difficult unless Mr. Nkomo would involve all nationalist factions in the governmental process. He said he thought that while Mr. Nkomo had obtained most of the support of Africans outside Rhodesia, inside the country Bishop Muzorewa and the Rev. Sithole commanded the loyalties of most blacks.

A white physician said he saw no reason to pack his bags. "If it comes to rocks being thrown at my family of course I will leave, but it doesn't have to come to that. Joshua Nkomo was once my patient and I always found him a decent and reasonable bloke," said the doctor.

Last night, the Jacaranda Ball was held in one of the city's large hotels. The music was interrupted while Mr. Smith spoke. The dancers fell quiet. A few women dabbed at their eyes with handkerchiefs. But then the music started again and the couples, all white, drank, danced and laughed until early morning.

Some Predict White Backlash

It was suggested by some residents that people here had not fully realized and absorbed what the speech had meant. These people predict that the small white right wing, which includes a tiny Nazi Party, will yet be heard from decrying a sellout of white civilization, according to Mr. Smith and engineered by Henry A. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa.

This afternoon there was the usual Saturday jam session by a rock group at the black Queens Hotel. It was thronged with well-dressed men and women, several of the women blowing kisses and flirting with a white visitor. Black men insisted on buying beers for him. There was little talk of the speech or of the political future of the country.

Said one man, in explaining the reception, "I guess they are trying to tell you that majority rule does not mean that we want whites to leave." In the Queens Hotel, too, there was a sense that people had not grasped fully what the British-American package would mean, whether it remained intact or came apart.

ING TO KEEP FRIENDSHIP

The Rhodesians have economic sanctions for h trade has continued, and to a limited ex- countries including the an interim government with a black prime minister will lead to the lifting by the United Nations of the economic embargo and this would allow the consortium to invest funds in the Rhodesian economy.

Blacks to Be Taught Skills

Funds would be made available to teach Rhodesian blacks skills denied them up to now and to help a new black govern- ment through inevitable growing pains.

A major purpose of the fund will be to allow the government to have enough money to pay white land-owners for any property nationalized at a price high enough not to cause a panic in the white population.

The United States, Britain and South Africa want as many whites to remain in Rhodesia as possible. As an incentive, whites will be eligible for an insurance fund to be backed by the consortium. Under the program, the longer whites stayed in the country, the more money they would eventually be able to take out. Thus, the incentives would be greater for whites to stay than to leave at first.

Concern About Radicalization

Behind this plan is an American-British concern that Rhodesia not become radicalized during its transition. Rhodesia is so strategically situated on South Africa's borders and a major transit point for Mozambique, Zaire, Zambia and Botswana that a radical, pro-Soviet government in Rhodesia would be a threat to Western interests. It would also endanger Western supplies of chrome and nickel, with which Rhodesia is endowed.

When Mr. Kissinger conferred with Mr. Smith last Sunday and convinced him to yield to pressures for black rule, he turned over to the Prime Minister a draft on the proposed consortium plan. Summarizing it in his speech yesterday, Mr. Smith said that the consortium's goals were "aimed at giving both the European and the African certainty as to his future in a multiracial society and to demonstrate not only that the economic and social stability of the country will be maintained but that every individual can look forward to continued rising standards of living."

Although there has been no detailed consultations with Congress on the American role in bringing about Mr. Smith's virtual capitulation, United States officials believe that a major effort will have to be undertaken to persuade Congress and the American people that: after- tune to play a significant economic and years of neglect, this country should con- political role in southern Africa.

Not only will Congress be asked even- tually to appropriate what will run into several hundreds of millions of dollars, but the United States also seems inevita- bly caught in the politics of the area.

South African Role

Today, in a briefing for reporters, one of Mr. Kissinger's top aides said that the Rhodesian agreement would not have been possible without South Africa's deci- sion to help persuade Mr. Smith to yield. But the official added that South Africa would not have done so without assur- ances that the United States was deter- mined to bring about a change in Rhode- sia and prevent the Russians from having an excuse to intervene there as they did in Angola.

SOVIET SEES FRAUD IN RHODESIAN PLAN

Commentaries Picture Proposed As Designed to Preserve U.S. Interests in the Region

By DAVID K. SHPLER
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Sept. 25—The Soviet press agency Tass described the proposed Rhodesian settlement today as fraudulent, contending that it would create a pro-Western government to deflect the African national liberation movement.

The wording of dispatches from Washington, New York and Maputo, the Mozambique capital, seemed to raise the possibility that Moscow might urge black African leaders and guerrilla organizations to resist the proposal.

"The imperialist circles," the dispatch from Maputo said, "are trying at this stage to use the diplomacy of fraud and palliatives to give breathing space to the Rhodesian racists in order to strengthen their positions in the course of the so-called transition period."

The plan, which was accepted yesterday by Rhodesia's white minority government, calls for the immediate formation of an interim biracial government and for the transfer of power to the country's black majority within a two-year transition period.

U.S. Entrenchment Seen as Aim

The Tass dispatches called the plan a "pseudo-settlement" whose purpose, the agency said in a Washington commentary, was the securing of "United States political and economic interests in the south of Africa and preserving the last strongholds of colonialism and racism."

Throughout the mediation effort by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, the Soviet press kept up a barrage of attacks, charging that he was visiting southern Africa to insure the preservation of racist regimes.

Some Western analysts believe that the Soviet Government is concerned about losing influence among militant black Africans, who have long sought to terminate the white minority regimes in Rhodesia and South Africa.

Parallels With Mideast Drawn

Parallels were frequently drawn both by the Soviet press and by Western diplomats between southern Africa and the Middle East, where the Sinai settlement arranged by Mr. Kissinger last year between Israel and Egypt eroded Soviet influence among the Arabs.

The Tass commentaries left open the option of rejecting any black government installed through the Rhodesian agreement. Writing from Washington, Tass called the plan "a transfer of power in Rhodesia to a pro-Western regime with simultaneous granting of financial guarantees to the white minority to preserve its ruling economic positions."

This was an allusion to the internationally financed trust fund to be established outside Rhodesia for the purpose of organizing development and investment programs in Rhodesia.

Indian Regime Approves Ambitious Five-Year Plan After Delay of 2 1/2 Years

Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, Sept. 25—Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Government formally adopted today India's ambitious fifth five-year plan after a delay of nearly two and half years.

The $77 billion plan, a blueprint for development programs for five years that was scheduled to have begun in April 1974, has gone through many revisions. Inflation and a chaotic internal political situation until last year have been the major reasons for the delays.

Mrs. Gandhi, who presided over a two-day meeting of the National Development Council that adopted the plan said the formal adoption should act as a "morale booster."

"It provides clinching evidence that the nation has overcome the manifold problems with which it was confronted in the last couple of years, and that it is now in a position to resume the process of growth on a confident note," she said.

Outlay Is Up $16 Billion

The outlay under the revised plan is $16 billion more than what was provided in the draft plan drawn up three years ago providing for $61 billion. Officials attributed this increase largely to price rises. Officials explained that the adoption of the plan even at this late stage would give the Government firmer targets and permit better scheduling of expenditures.

The council adopted resolutions identifying the priority sectors—food, irrigation and energy. The target for food output at the end of the plan, according to the officials, is 125 million to 132 million tons a year depending on rains. In the last five years the annual food output ranged from 98 million tons to 116 million tons. Details of the plan will not be made public for at least two weeks, but according to officials the expenditures have been significantly increased on all projects involving the rural sector, where 80 per cent of India's population lives.

The plan calls for an annual growth rate of 4.5 percent, which would be a significant improvement on the zero to negligible rate during the first two years of the plan. In the last year, however, the growth rate has risen largely because of bumper harvests.

MIG-25 Is Moved From Airport To a Japanese Military Facility

TOKYO, Sept. 25 (UPI)—Japanese defense experts removed a top-secret Soviet MIG-25 from a commercial airport to a military air base early today.

The MIG-25, the Soviet Union's most sophisticated plane, was flown to northern Japan on Sept. 6 by a defecting Soviet Air Force lieutenant. The plane was transferred today from Hakodate to Hyakuri Air Base northeast of Tokyo by United States Galaxy C-5 transport plane.

The MIG's fuselage was covered by canvas as it was put on board the huge aircraft. A white banner with Japanese letters saying, "sayonara [Goodbye] to you all in Hakodate, sorry to cause you trouble" was hung across the covered fuselage. It was believed to have been written by an official of the Defense Agency.

Leftist Unions in France Call for a General Strike on Oct. 7 to Protest Government's Anti-Inflation Measures

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Sept. 25—Even before details were known of France's latest anti-inflation program, unions were telling their members that it represented simply another effort to soak the poor.

The day after the announcement the unions called a 24-hour general strike for Oct. 7 to protest what they saw as inequities.

The reactions of the General Confederation of Labor, the Communist-led labor organization whose leader is a member of the party's Politburo here, and the French Democratic Confederation of Labor, which is allied with the left wing of the Socialist Party, were regarded as predictable.

The reason is the political nature of the French labor movement. The unions are in effect the stalwarts of the political opposition to the Centrist Government of President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing.

Wage Gains Fuel Inflation

Union cooperation is needed to check the wage advances that are fueling French inflation. But it is practically a foregone conclusion the unions will fight every inch of the way.

Judging from inflation rates, the economy of France is worse off than the United States or West Germany, but still in better shape than Britain and Italy, where an erosion of currency values and other difficulties are reducing the national wealth.

Prime Minister Raymond Barre's stabilization plan for France is intended to avoid such erosion here which threatened during the summer in an acceleration of price increases and a widening of the trade deficit.

The plan will freeze prices until Dec. 31, install a guideline of 605 percent for wage increases, raise taxes for higher-income groups, tighten money and exchange controls and discourage driving.

But France's unions, realizing that the Government is counting on at least partial success of the Barre measures to help it stay in office, are forced into rigid adversary positions by their political nature.

Seek to Replace Capitalism

The main unions here hold that the working man can achieve justice only if the capitalist society is replaced.

"We are out to transform capitalist society, giving it a clear and distinct anticapitalist perspective," says Georges Seguy, chief of the General Confederation of Labor.

He envisions construction of "French socialism," and says that it would be "ridiculous to copy the model of any other country," a repetition of the traditional French Communist assertion that the party is not under the wing of Moscow.

The French Democratic Confederation of Labor believes in a more radical changeover. The transformation of the economic base of capitalism is insufficient, it holds, without actual worker management of the means of production. Its leader is an intense man, Edmond Maire.

The Communist and Socialist factions' main criticism of the stabilization program is that at a time when summer spending should be stimulated to insure faster economic growth and employment, Mr. Barre is applying brakes in what they consider a damnable and probably futile effort to curb inflation.

André Bergeron, leader of a third smaller union federation, the Force, is not associating his organization with the general strike on Oct. 7.

Haig Calls NATO Drills Response To Gain in Warsaw Pact Abilities

By DREW MIDDLETON
Special to The New York Times

BRUSSELS, Sept. 25—The North Atlantic alliance has responded to changes in the East-West strategic balance with a series of exercises intended to tighten the combat readiness of its military forces.

Gen. Alexander M. Haig, NATO's commander, said in an interview that the changes had resulted from what he called the relentless improvement in the capabilities of the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact countries and the reduction in the warning time the West can expect in the event of Soviet attack.

NATO's response this summer and autumn has been a series of 27 overlapping exercises involving a quarter of a million people, 1,500 aircraft and 400 naval vessels. The exercises extended from Norway and the eastern Atlantic Ocean across Western Europe to the eastern basin of the Mediterranean.

Of the alliance's 15 members, only Iceland, which has no military forces, and Greece, which has ended military integration in NATO, will not be represented. The French, discreetly edging back to cooperation if not integration, will be represented in the Mediterranean exercises.

"We in the West are faced with a situation in which we will have reduced warning time," General Haig said. "That places upon us the requirement to tighten up our combat readiness."

The general said that the West, benefiting from technological improvements in overhead photography, spy satellites and the like, had acquired a greater ability to pick up signs that an attack might be near, among them troop concentrations and the movement of forces.

"Now against that trend," the general said, "we have a situation in which we have observed the relentless improvement of the Warsaw Pact capability in place today. I am talking about the increases in numbers and mobility and the improvement in the quality of their equipment to the point where it is now increasingly clear that the Warsaw Pact is acquiring the ability to launch an attack with minimum, certainly less than the past, reinforcement of their in-place forward echelon."

An important element in the Russians' ability to attack without sizable reinforcement is the annual rotation by air of 100,000 troops into Central Europe. These troops could be flown in during what appeared to be a normal replacement program, pick up pre-stored weapons and become operational.

Among the improvements in Soviet force capabilities noted by the NATO commander were a 20 percent increase in the size of divisions in Eastern Europe, supplying of extra batteries for artillery regiments and a rapid improvement in the quality of the Soviet tactical air force resulting from the deployment of more sophisticated fighters, fighter-bombers and long-range strike aircraft. The most significant plane from NATO's standpoint probably is the SU-19, code-named Fencer, which can attack any European NATO airfield, including those in Britain, with a 6,000-pound payload.

One objective of the 27 exercises is greater integration of tactical doctrine and procedures, General Haig said.

General Haig has made some progress toward what he calls a more realistic deployment of the alliance's forces on the Central European front. In the past the bulk of the American forces were situated in the central and southern areas of West Germany and the north German plain, areas considered the most obvious avenue of Soviet attack and relatively lightly held. Now an American armored brigade has been deployed in the Bremen area as what General Haig calls the lead element of the corps that the United States would send in a crisis.

Postal Employees On Strike in Spain; 2 Leaders Seized

By HENRY GINGERER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, Sept. 25—Several thousand postal workers in Spain are tying up the mails for the third time this year to push wage demands in a major test of the Government's ability to keep down labor tensions while it proceeds with political reform.

The strikers were enraged by the first official response—the arrest of two of the strike leaders and the Government's call for volunteers to help sort the hundreds of thousands of pieces of mail that have accumulated since the strike began Thursday.

The mailmen gathered under the arcades of the central post office this morning and watched silently as some 300 volunteers, most of them students, entered the building to sign up for sorting jobs.

The strike is spreading through the provinces, with at least eight cities affected besides Madrid.

This morning the postal workers told reporters outside the central post office that they would not return to work until Andres Martin Moya, a strike leader arrested yesterday, was released. Early this afternoon, plainclothesmen moved into the group and arrested Geronimo Lorente, another leader. Shots were fired during the scuffling that followed, and angry postal workers ran after the police car that was taking Mr. Lorente to police headquarters. The crowd was later dispersed.

The strikers had sought to talk to Mr. Acha, who stood in the main hall watching the volunteers sign up. He said in an interview that he was ready to negotiate but rejected the workers' commission as an illegal group that had been named on a mere show of hands in worker assemblies. He said that he would accept representatives elected by a secret vote.

Outside the workers said that they were ready to meet this requirement but were confident that the result would be the same.

The Government had responded to the first strike last January by placing all the mailmen under military orders and arresting eight strike leaders. In July the outgoing director general negotiated with the strikers' commission in a departure from a 40-year-old policy of denying to both Government employees and private workers the right to organize and strike. But Mr. Acha made it clear that neither he nor the Government felt bound by the concessions made to the workers' commission, which after having been negotiated with is now considered illegal.

of South Korean Dissident Says That Imprisonment Appears to Damage the Health of Her Husband

The New York Times
Korea, Sept. 25—Every at 9:30, Mrs. Kim Dae of the former South Kol candidate, drives to the House in hopes of seeing
r. Kim, who ran against Chung Hee in 1971, has here now for six months.
that her husband appears d in need of immediate on. He was undergoing it for chronic neuralgia rested in March.
Mrs. Kim, prison life has apparently worsened his condition. When they met two weeks ago she said his eyes were deeply sunken and that he told her of intermittent vomiting. Her efforts to have him granted bail have not succeeded.

Along with 17 others, the 51-year-old opposition leader was sentenced last month to eight years in prison on charges of violating the emergency decree. Declared in May 1975 to stop widening dissent against the Government, the decree forbids virtually all anti-government acts.
According to one private estimate there are about 120 political prisoners held under the emergency, mostly students, intellectuals and Christian clergymen.

Others convicted with him for signing a declaration asking for President Park's resignation and restoration of democracy included former President Yun Po Sun, five Roman Catholic priests and other intellectuals.
Mrs. Kim is allowed one 10-minute visit per week, but she visits the prison each day to see if she might be allowed to see her husband an extra time. Their conversations, Mrs. Kim said, are held under strict supervision.
Mrs. Kim said she is giving her husband two weeks ago that he was vomiting, perhaps as a result of overdoses. According to Mrs. Kim, he said during one recent visit:

"I am trying to fight the pain lest the Government takes the wrong notion of my nerves weakening." Even so, she said he has confessed that the pain is worsening and that he was wondering how long he could hold on.
Perhaps the next best-known prisoner is Kim Chi Hah, the poet, who is not related to the opposition presidential candidate. The 35-year-old writer, famed for ballads lampooning corruption and lack of democracy, is now undergoing a second trial involving the anti-Communist law. He has been charged with praising an organization that the Government has branded as being Communist.

Mrs. Kim was serving a life sentence for sedition when he was charged again a year and half ago. Since then, says his mother, he has not been allowed a single visitor.
Government officials, explaining the unusually tight security, say Mr. Kim had used normal prison amenities to write and smuggle out anti-Government tracts.
One of these was a statement of conscience arguing that he was never a Communist.
President Park, justifying the emergency decree, says the suppression of dissent is necessary to national security. He says North Korea must be prevented from "misreading" unrest in South Korea. With North Korean threats seeming especially serious at times, such as when two United States officers were killed at Pannunjom last month, it becomes increasingly difficult to work with the dissidents.

Families of dissidents are deeply despondent. In a letter to the Democratic Unification Party, a small party with only three members in Parliament, Mrs. Hong Nan Sun, mother of a student serving a life sentence, wrote: "Our cheerful family life is gone. If I could replace my son in jail I would do so."

First, look at our Fifth Avenue windows. Then see the collection in motion at a formal showing tomorrow, Monday, at 11:30. You'll see it's no mere extravagance when we call this Christian Dior's New Look. The luxury is there. The sense of statement, still there. Dior captures your mood with a sure, vivid realism. For this is a new way of looking at clothes and the modern woman. It starts with the hyper-fluid Fortuny-style pleated skirt. This in black. Builds to a flowing burgundy jersey tunic. Then, the incredible. A parka in purple silk. The total effect is something to be seen, so we hope you'll be here when we present our special show.

After Strain of Month of Fasting, People of Damascus Relax, Feast, Visit Friends and Forget Problems

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

DAMASCUS, Syria, Sept. 25—The people of Damascus are in the midst of a three-day weekend of trying to forget their troubles, including tension in neighboring Lebanon, rising inflation and the fasting and penance that faithful Moslems were supposed to be doing in the month of Ramadan, which has just ended.

Most of the 1.5 million residents of this dusty city, which claim to be the oldest continuously inhabited capital in the world—founded 4,000 years ago—put on their best clothes for a stroll in the sun and a visit to the mosque.

In middle-class and lower-class families, the men made the rounds on foot of socially required holiday visits to the homes of other men, where they sipped bitter Arab coffee from tiny cups and nibbled chocolates. Most of the women stayed home preparing the huge noon meal based on stuffed mutton (the meat costing about $2.50 a pound, if a friendly butcher had put it aside.)

Children rode on truck-mounted amusement contraptions all over town, and several small boys vexed or amused customers on the sidewalk terrace of the French-style Vendôme restaurant by shooting cap pistols and rifles at one another and the diners.

For the half-million Lebanese refugees here, the day held some hope as news of another cease-fire agreement offer was repeated in the newspapers and on the radio. But many of the poorer refugees still have little work. Damascus streets, ruzzed and cluttered with cars and an occasional braying donkey, are now further crowded by Lebanese taxis that have come here from Beirut and other cities across the border.

They add considerably to the honking cacophony, which has abated but not stopped since an antinoise ordinance was adopted to subject violators to fines.

Lebanon was also the subject of the speech given at the nation's principal house of worship, the Omayyad Mosque, by Sheikh Abdul Sattar Sayed, who is Minister of Islamic Property and Charities in the Government of President Hafez al-Assad. After Mr. Assad had taken off his shoes, entered the mosque and knelt in prayer with his head aimed south at Mecca, the minister said:

"Islam is the religion of love. Islam is the religion of justice. Islam does not approve of revenge and bloodshed for their own sake."

Then, most of his top aides present, Mr. Assad, who some officials and diplorats feel may decide to order further military action by his occupation troops in Lebanon, heard Sheikh Abdul say, "Hafez Assad, we support you with all our souls and all our belief that all your steps in Lebanon are in keeping with the laws of Islam."

Christians Call on Moslems

Some Christians, who comprise less than 10 percent of the city's population, visited their Moslem friends during the holiday, and the small Jewish community was busy with its own feast, Rosh Hashanah. For upper-class Syrians, it was a time to go to the Casino, which thrives near the airport in this nominally austere Socialist-oriented republic. Some of the capital's elite had a quiet evening dinner and bridge at the plush Oriental Hotel.

In another part of the city, Syrian popular guitarist, George Yassine, was opening the nightlife season by playing two new tunes at a downtown movie house showing American westerns and old Tarzan films.

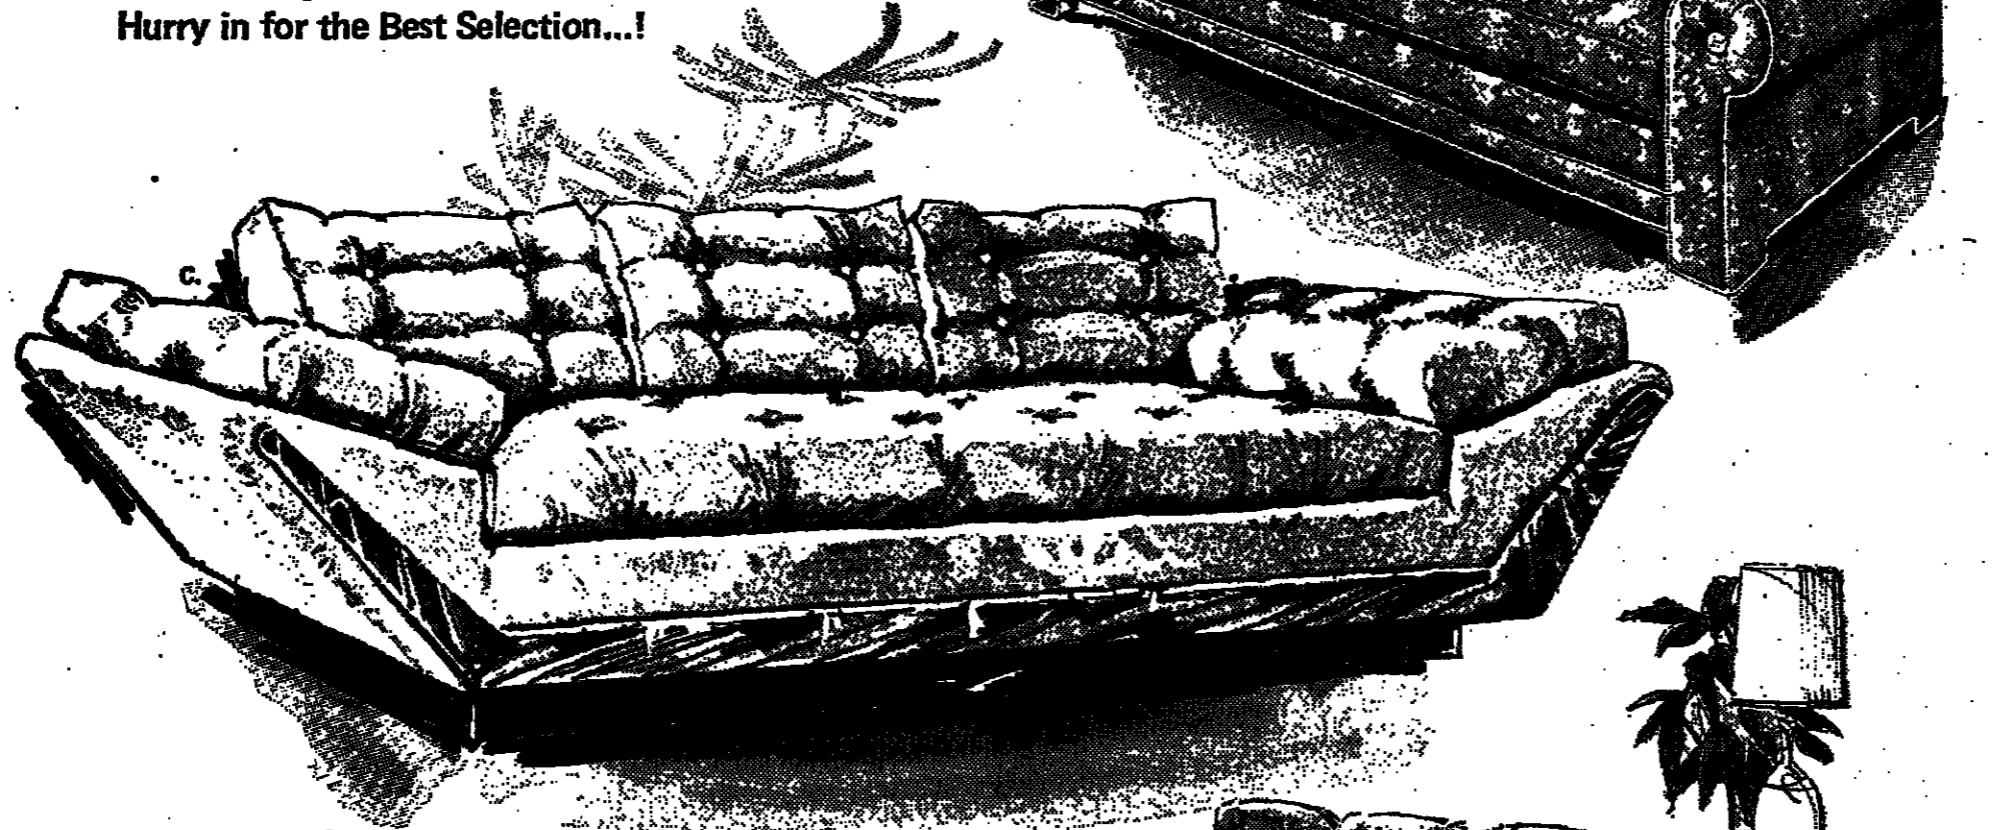

On the home television screen, the traditional Arabic-style songs were for the first time by the country's popular singer, Isam Raji, in a duet with Georgette Sayegh.

Immigrants' Flow Worrying Government

25—American Jewish nd Israelis share the re that this country x and that the Soviet a population estimated at three million, is one of the world's largest potential sources. Soviet Jews who divert to the United States, these Americans and Israelis feel, work against Israel's need for immigrants.

Between 1968 and 1973, only 1,500 of the 82,500 Jews reaching Vienna decided against continuing to Israel. However in the last three years the phenomenon has snowballed, causing deep concern. In the first seven months of this year, official figures here show, about 48 percent of the Jews who left the Soviet Union with visas for Israel dropped out after reaching the main Western European transit point at Vienna.

The great majority of those who decided against going to Israel, the data show, reached the United States with the assistance of two American organizations—the Joint Distribution Committee and the United Hias Service. About 10,000 entered the United States by that route over the last three years, exploiting the convenience of the Western European transit stops. The Soviet Union does not allow direct flights to Israel.

Had the travelers flown directly from Moscow to Tel Aviv and then applied for entry to the United States, they would not have enjoyed priorities and assistance as homeless refugees and would have had to go through normal procedures and be subject to quotas on equal terms with others wishing to immigrate.

An idea suggested here was that the American Government and Jewish institutions aiding the immigrants should be asked to treat those who leave the Soviet Union with Israeli visas as Israelis and not as refugees.

Democratic Party Goes International In Hunt for Votes

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL

JERUSALEM, Sept. 25—Besides their platoons of speech writers, coatholders and boosters, American political candidates are nurtured by the nameless legions of the party faithful who knock on doors from Southampton to Seattle urging the electorate to get out and vote.
The Democratic National Committee has been widening its net, having gone international in its quest for votes.

Armed with a filmed paeon to Jimmy Carter, Steven Cohen, a 35-year-old Massachusetts lawyer, is knocking on doors all across his far-flung district, from Britain to Israel, exhorting Americans to cast their ballots.

He passed through Jerusalem the other day, a victim of jet lag and beset by a task impossible of performance in so little time.

"This week—it was nine days—I hit Israel, Germany, Belgium, France and Italy," he said in the dazed tone of a tourist who had padded through half a dozen citadels of culture in the time it normally takes to drive from Newburgh to Newark.
As he drank a beer he kept glancing at his watch.

As campaign director of Democrats Abroad, a number of small political groups begun in 1964 in half a dozen or so countries with headquarters in London, Mr. Cohen, who is from Newton, is responsible for seeing that as many as possible of the 1.5 million Americans living overseas cast their ballots.

Remarking that he was unaware that he had a globetrotting Republican counterpart, he described his task this way:
"I just go into American neighborhoods and knock on doors, I put ads in English-language papers and hang posters up."

"We're doing target districts to put on computers all the Democrats we can find overseas," he said, explaining that the idea behind computerizing the expatriates was to barrage them with mailings from home, with particular targets those last registered in Congressional districts where their ballots might determine the outcome in tight races.

Future of Arab Lands Looming As Election-Year Issue in Israel

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL

JERUSALEM, Sept. 25—Israel is at the beginning of an election year that is expected to bring a debate on the nation's precarious economic state and on the future of the occupied Arab territories.

The question of the Arab lands was revived last week with the publication in the October issue of Foreign Affairs magazine of an article by Foreign Minister Yigal Allon.

Mr. Allon's proposal, though not new, led to a special session of Parliament that turned into a shouting match on Tuesday.

The session of Parliament was called by the rightist Likud opposition bloc, led by Menachem Begin, which opposes territorial concessions.

Mr. Rabin, who is head of the ruling Labor party alignment in Parliament, did not choose to defend Mr. Allon, turning over that task to Israel Galili, a Minister without Portfolio.

"It is a pity," said the Labor Party newspaper Davar, "that the alignment put up such a weak and defensive show, allowing the proposal that the Foreign Minister be ousted to be referred to committee rather than striking it decisively from the agenda. This was a poor start for an election year."

The Jerusalem Post chided Mr. Allon for having published the article without clearing it with the Prime Minister.

"Mr. Allon has only served to point up the internal disarray of Israel's Government," the Post said.

Many politicians here expect the state of Israel's economy to loom large as an election-year issue, noting that the inflation rate is at 30 percent or higher.

Elections Now Scheduled For Fall

The elections are now scheduled for next autumn. There has been talk in Labor circles of trying to change the date to as early as January to offset a lengthy campaign at a time when the economic outlook is gloomy.

The issue of a Middle East settlement also cropped up in interviews given to Israeli newspapers by Mr. Rabin and two other Israeli leaders, former Prime Minister Golda Meir and Defense Minister Shimon Peres.

"We are determined to withstand any form of pressure—and feel we can do it—if anyone tries to force us into an agreement we regard as not in our best interests," Mr. Rabin said.

Mrs. Meir, who is semi-retired, predicted that "strong U.S. pressure to withdraw to the 1967 borders could be expected within the next year."

A-POWER OPPOSITION GROWING IN EUROPE

At First Rarely Consulted, Public Now Decreasingly Concerned With Possible Hazards

By PETER T. KALBORN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Sept. 25—Public opposition to nuclear power in western Europe, long cerebral, apolitical and ineffective, is gathering the kind of force that has slowed reactor building in many parts of the United States.

Plans to build the first atomic power plants in Denmark and Norway have been put off, and the Netherlands, which has two nuclear facilities, has postponed at least until next year a decision on whether to build more. In parts of West Germany and Switzerland, critics of nuclear energy have snarled Government utilities in protracted legal skirmishes, and France has experienced sit-ins and even bombings at reactor construction sites.

This week, nuclear power in Europe suffered two sharp blows. A 17-member Royal Commission in Britain, appointed by the Government and led by a nuclear physicist, urged a delay in adding to the 11 plants now operating. It called for a long, open debate.

In Sweden, where per capita consumption of uranium-generated electricity is among the world's highest, the outgoing Prime Minister, Olof Palme, attributed his Social Democratic Party's election defeat last Sunday, after 44 years in office, to an opponent's promise to scrap Government plans to build more reactors and to dismantle the five already in operation.

Britain Led the Way

The election means that this is likely to become a political issue in other countries, said Czech Conroy, an energy expert here at Friends of the Earth, part of a worldwide American-based environmental organization that has been leading the protest drive.

Nuclear power was born in Europe 20 years ago, when Britain switched on the world's first atomic generating plant at Calder Hall, in northwest England. Sixty-eight reactors now operate in European countries and 92 others are under construction. But Ireland and Portugal, as well as Norway and Denmark, have not yet gone to nuclear power.

Throughout the emergence of atomic energy, the public was rarely offered a voice in the planning, and indeed it rarely sought one. In Britain and France, reactor programs were closely allied with top-secret programs. About three years ago, however, people became concerned about the large windowless concrete boxes going up in their neighborhoods and along their rivers, but those who objected found it hard to be heard.

In the United States, opposition has been able to find legal means of obstructing undue power," said Edwin Matthews, an American lawyer in Paris and a member of the Friends of the Earth there. He was speaking of the court actions that have stalled some plans to build reactors and the development of other programs.

"Most of that is missing in Europe," Mr. Matthews added.

Placed on November Ballots

Opponents of nuclear power in the United States have also managed to get proposals to limit such development onto ballots in the November elections in Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Montana and Ohio. However, Californians, voting in a primary election June 8, defeated a similar proposal 2 to 1.

In France, a French member of the Friends of the Earth, Henry de Cazotte, noted, "There has been no debate on the energy issue, and everything is decided in the Council of Ministers."

Protests, however, have been registered through occupations of reactor sites, marches, petitioning and even attempted sabotage. Last year, terrorists bombed a reactor being built at Fessenheim, near the West German border, and they also blew up a computer at the country's principal builder of reactors. For five days last July, 10,000 dissidents occupied the Creys Malville site along the Rhone, where an important new reactor is scheduled to be erected.

Construction has also been delayed by a sit-in at a West German plant in Wyhl, in the state of Baden-Wuerttemberg. Because of such incidents the time it takes for a West German utility to get a license to build a reactor has reportedly stretched from four months ten years ago to 34 months today.

Opposition Gaining Respectability

Meanwhile, the opposition is winning increasing respectability. Over the last year, labor unions in the Netherlands and in France have called for delays in atomic energy development. French Socialists, once solid backers of the Government in nuclear matters, have begun to hedge, supporting nuclear energy but urging caution.

Most recently, prominent scientist have been speaking out against nuclear power. Hendrik Casimir, a physicist and former president of the Dutch Royal Academy, signed a petition this year opposing nuclear power. Marcel Froissart, who holds the physics chair in the elite College de France, has organized an anti-nuclear lobby of French scientists.

In Sweden, Thorbjorn Falldin, the Center Party leader and likely successor to Prime Minister Palme, credited Harnes Alfvén, the Swedish physicist and Nobel Prize winner, with having awakened him to the hazards of nuclear energy—among them possible radiation leaks and explosions, the continued radioactivity of fuel wastes and the heat pollution of adjacent rivers and bays.

Aiding the opposition are such factors as the recent worldwide recession and the savings that Europe learned to make during the 1973-1974 energy crisis. These brought the growth in electrical consumption to a standstill, thus taking the heat off the reactor-building race.

Europe's Most Ambitious Program

Three years ago, France launched Europe's most ambitious nuclear program to insulate itself from future energy crises. It decided to build six to eight reactors a year. But the goal has dropped to three to five because consumption has dropped and it was feared that the cost would have cripple the economy.

In the United States, too, the high cost of nuclear power has been an important factor in slowing development. While the United States at the end of last month had 61 nuclear-power plants in operation, 43 under construction and more than 100 planned, the total is much smaller than envisaged several years ago.

PROFESSOR SIGNS IN RUHR

Scholar Seeking Democratic Votes in Union Stronghold

By ALG E. WHITNEY
The New York Times
West Germany, Sept. 19—An American-educated professor is launching a conservative Christian Democratic campaign to the coal miners of the Ruhr, roads into a vital stronghold Helmut Schmidt's Social Party.

H. Biedenkopf, secretary general of the Christian Democratic Union, tells friends all over the highly industrial region that the labor unions are too bureaucratic and the Social Democrats too corrupt. He wants to control the unions to control the region.

Mr. Biedenkopf's strategy is risky. In the Ruhr, where his party must win 37 percent of the vote to elect a Chancellor after the vote, the unions are as much as they are in the steel industry.

Some Americans in Mexico Gain, Some Lose in Devaluation of Peso

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 25—The recent 37 percent devaluation of the Mexican peso has either gladdened or shocked thousands of elderly and disabled Americans who are living in retirement in Mexico.

Those who are living on Social Security payments or private pensions sent to them in dollars each month from the United States are finding their purchasing power vastly improved.

But those who invested their life savings in Mexican fixed-interest peso bonds and are living on that income have been stunned by the realization that this first devaluation here in 22 years has sharply reduced their financial worth.

Generally one doesn't know much about other people's finances or where they get their money from, said Dorothy Jester, a retired Foreign Service officer who is president of the American Society in Guadalajara, about 300 miles northwest of here. "But now you suddenly see a long face and you know they had their money in pesos."

Estimated at Up to 75,000

Statistics on the number of Americans living in Mexico—both retired people and businessmen—are unreliable since not everyone registers with the United States Embassy or consulates. But it is best estimated that between 50,000 and 75,000 are permanent residents, with perhaps two-thirds of these retired.

In general the retirees keep away from the noise, pollution and high altitude of Mexico City, preferring the colonial town of San Miguel de Allende, the warm spa of Cuernavaca or the tranquility of Lake Chapala near Guadalajara.

The day after the devaluation was announced, many Americans here were reduced to tears by the shock. "I've had people ringing me and crying on the phone all morning," a New Yorker living in Mexico City reported.

"The shock was horrendous," said Emily Bowman, a 50-year-old widow who lives in Guadalajara and had her small savings in pesos.

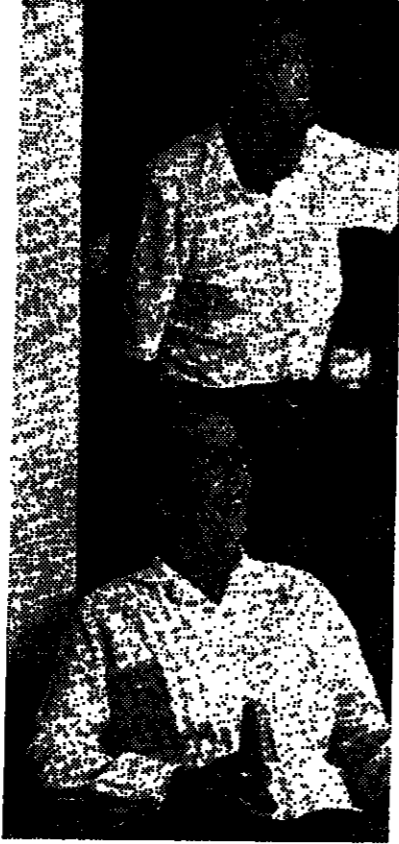

"But We're Going to Stay"

Mrs. Bowman was especially hard hit because she must find dollars to pay for her 17-year-old son's education at Guadalajara Autonomous University's medical school, where Americans are charged high fees in their own currency.

"But we're going to stay here," she said in a telephone interview. "My son is totally bilingual and I'm very pro-Mexican."

For those with pensions or savings in dollars, the devaluation is less a windfall than a recovery of the purchasing power they enjoyed before Mexico was stricken by severe inflation three years ago.

Since 1973 prices have risen so much faster here than in the United States that the attraction of Mexico to many retirees disappeared. Not only did the rate of new arrivals drop, but also some of the elderly returned to the United States because they were eligible for Medicare at home and could not afford doctors' fees here.

The devaluation of the peso was "great" for William and Celia Wakefield, who live in Colima on a small Social Security pension.

"The devaluation was great for us," said Celia Wakefield, a 60-year-old Californian who now lives in Colima with her retired doctor husband, William, on a small Social Security pension.

Mrs. Wakefield, a freelance writer, recently wrote an article for a medical magazine entitled, "How to Be Comfortable on $10,000 a Year."

"I reckon I can now rename it, How to be comfortable on $6,000 a year," she said. "Our rent, for example, has gone down from $80 to $50 a month."

The amount of money brought into Mexico by the retired Americans, estimated at about $50 million a year, is not enough to have been a factor in leading the Mexican Government to order the devaluation of the peso on Aug. 31.

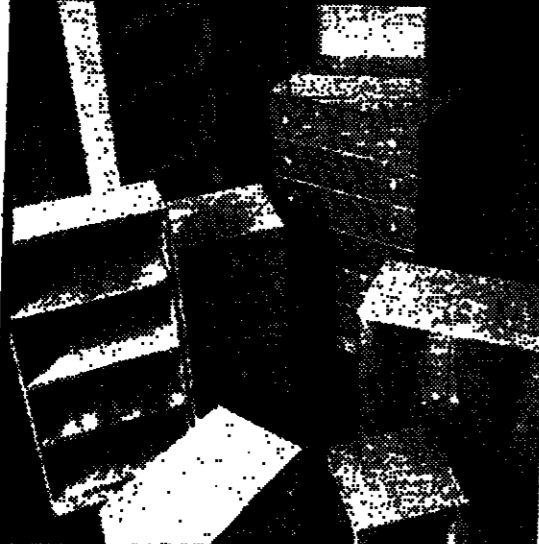

But if the Mexican Government is successful in controlling the inflationary surge following devaluation, the country is again expected to become attractive to Americans with fixed pensions who are in search of the sun or, in the case of disabled veterans, need to employ cheap domestic help.

Yugoslavia and Rumania Are Believed to Have Problems With a Project for Joint Production of Jet Fighter

BY COLM W. BROWNE
 and to the New York Times
 Yugoslavia, Sept. 23—Plans for Yugoslavia for joint production of a Yugoslav-designed fighter to reduce dependence of Yugoslavia on foreign arms supplies, bogged down in technical problems, President Nicolae Ceausescu and President Tito here reviewed leaders discussed a long time in which their two countries are operating. But there was no mention of the "Orao"—and other reasons, there has been speculation by Western experts that Yugoslavia may have decided instead on new Soviet-built or other foreign planes. Efforts by such American arms suppliers as Northrop to sell Yugoslavia new equipment appear to be frozen in an atmosphere of generally poor Yugoslav-American relations.

 Yugoslav intentions to build a locally designed first-line fighter came to light in technical publications about three years ago.
 In April last year, President Tito visited an airfield near here to inspect the finished prototype of the Orao, meaning Eagle, and the Yugoslav press published photographs and descriptions of the plane. It was disclosed in Western trade publications that Yugoslavia planned to build 1,000 Rolls-Royce Viper engines under license to power the single-engine Orao, and that production models would include afterburners to increase speed into the supersonic range.

 Yugoslavia also disclosed that production would be jointly maintained by Yugoslavia and Rumania. Both countries were to manufacture components and subassemblies as well as the finished airplanes. Weapons systems and communications, navigation and other equipment for the Orao were to be acquired in the West, it was believed.
 A production of 1,000 airplanes would have greatly enhanced the air capability of both Rumania and Yugoslavia—needlessly in the view of some Western experts. Yugoslavia's current force of high-performance planes consists mainly of 110 MIG-21 fighters. The country also has 15 obsolete American-built F-84 fighters, 30 Yugoslav Kraguj and 150 Yugoslav Galeb and Jastreb ground-support planes.

 Rumania has 230 jet fighters—MIG-15's, MIG-19's and MIG-21's and about 75 ground-support planes, old MIG-15's and MIG-17's.
 As nearly as can be determined, Yugoslavia still has only one prototype of the Orao and there are reports in technical circles that it will be three years before it can go into production. Rumania is reported to have three of the prototype planes.

Yugoslavia an Arms Exporter
 There were indications that both Belgrade and Bucharest had high hopes for the plane. One reason is that Yugoslavia manufactures a large volume of weapons for export, particularly to so-called non-aligned nations and to certain "liberation fighters."
 Among the infantry weapons Yugoslavia has particularly sought to sell is its 7.62-millimeter Model 59/66 automatic rifle. Yugoslavia is thought to have considered exporting the Orao as well as competition with the American F-5 and other relatively cheap foreign fighters on the export market. There may have been difficulty acquiring much of the electronic equipment from the West that would be required to produce the plane.

 Also, some Western engineers have doubted from the outset that the Orao could cope with compression effects and other forces imposed at supersonic speeds by an afterburning engine. The prototype does not have an afterburner and flies at subsonic speeds. It is also believed that major manufacturing problems may have developed in Rumania with some of the components.

Sculptor Expelled by Moscow Is in the U.S. Looking for Work

By RICHARD HALLORAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25 — Ernst Neizvestny, the Russian sculptor who left the Soviet Union in March, stood in the center of his hotel room, sketches strewn under the window, blown-up photographs piled on the bed, manuscripts sitting on the dresser.

"For 20 years," he said, "I was thinking of going to the United States. Why here? For 20 years, I have been working on a project called the heart of mankind, or the tree of men. This is the country where I thought I could get some help."

In an interview, Mr. Neizvestny described his project. If it comes about, it will be 500 feet high, 500 feet in diameter, he shaped like a heart, contain 800 smaller units of sculpture, use materials ranging from steel to glass to plastic to bronze, and require a space of 2,000 feet in diameter.

The artist, who talks with his hands and his eyes as much as his tongue, arrived from Zurich on Thursday to attend the unveiling of a bust he made of Dmitri Shostakovich for the Kennedy Center.

Looking for Work in the U.S.

He said through an interpreter that he planned to stay for three months, "trying to find a job," meaning making sculptures on commissions. "And trying to find somebody who might be interested in my project." Mr. Neizvestny, who has a chest like a barrel and arms like a stevedore, shrugged: "If so, I'll stay. If not..."

Mr. Neizvestny came to the attention of the West in 1962, when his works were criticized by Nikita S. Khrushchev for being too abstract. But after Mr. Khrushchev died, his family asked Mr. Neizvestny to make a modern bust of Mr. Khrushchev to mark his grave.

After numerous requests for permission to travel abroad, Mr. Neizvestny said, he "provoked" the Soviet authorities into expelling him. Because his mother was Jewish, they gave him permission to emigrate to Israel.

In Austria, Israeli officials told him that he would have difficulty traveling on an Israeli passport and might not be able to accomplish the work he had in mind. They advised him to apply for a Swiss passport, which he is now using.

Since leaving the Soviet Union, Mr. Neizvestny has been traveling in Europe collecting his sketches, pictures and other objects that had been sent out of the Soviet Union.

A Book on the "Great Nothing"

He has also written a book about his experiences in the Soviet Union, titled "The Theory and Practice of the Great Nothing." It has an opening poem: "The people are angry because the Party is not giving. To all. But the Party is not a whore. And therefore cannot give. To all. On human rights in the Soviet Union. Mr. Neizvestny agreed with Andrei D. Sakharov, the physicist, that the West should continue pressing the authorities to relent on restrictions. Dr. Sakharov and 90 Soviet Jews recently appealed to both President Ford and Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, to keep up the pressure.

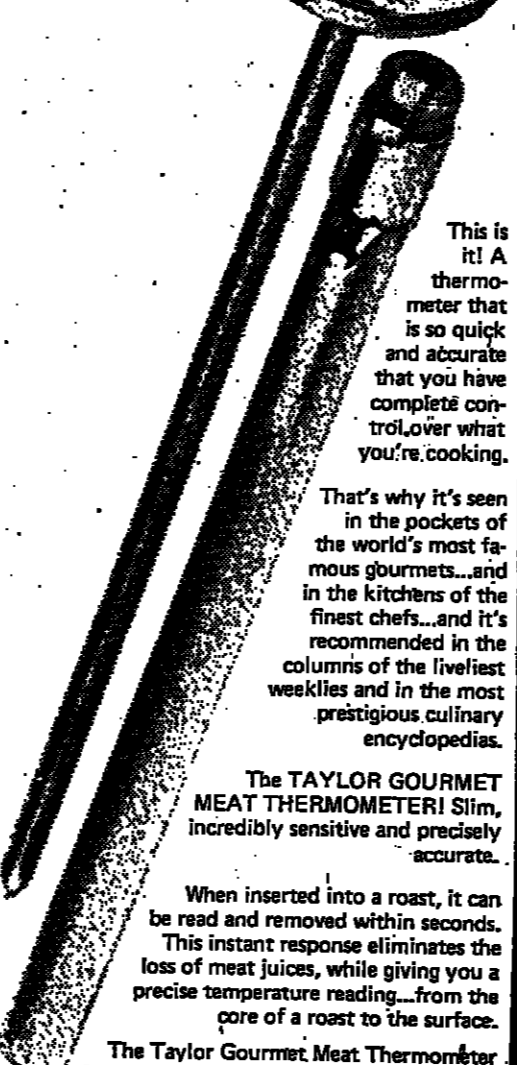

Model of the central portion of Ernst Neizvestny's "Tree of Man," 500 feet high and 500 feet wide. Elevators would carry visitors to the top.

Mr. Neizvestny said: "A great people such as the Russian people must get their own human rights. But because of historical circumstances, they lack to a great extent the ability to do that. So the Soviet people frequently appeal to the West. I am deeply convinced," he added, "that a nation as large as the Soviet Union is related to global peace. This is not just a Soviet problem; what happens in the Soviet Union leaves an imprint on the rest of the world."

Mr. Neizvestny observes that two American Presidential candidates debated without notes on Thursday. "The leaders in the Soviet Union always speak from notes," he said. "Why? Because they can't think themselves."

COLLAR WAGES SWELL BUDGET

Provisions Often Result in Jobs Higher Than Ones in Private Industry

JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

TON, Sept. 25—When Sen. (R-Ore) Monroney was running for re-election in 1968, he wrote a provision into the Federal laws designed to benefit Federal wage workers in his State of Oklahoma.

Monroney was defeated, but the amendment, which he wrote, was adopted because "they said it would help him in his re-election."

Senator Monroney was chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee. The amendment, as it has since been known, provided for adding about $70 million to the defense budget.

The amendment is one of several provisions that Congress has passed in the years since that time to benefit these workers on a wage basis for the Federal Government. It is one of the provisions that have caused the Administration to ask Congress to repeal three of them on the ground that the blue-collar workers in private industry were being paid more than those in the Government.

The House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees did not pass the Administration's proposal of the Congressional inaction did nearly $6 billion to the set over the next five years. Officials in the Defense Department Congressional inaction program are an example of a program within the Pentagon that is being decry "waste" in the get, often it is action—or the politicians in Congress necessarily to the cost of the program.

The report also provides an insight into legislative proposals by the Administration which can be blocked by the divisions in Congress and a few committee or subcommittee members. The report on a $104 billion appropriations bill, the Senate Finance Committee deplored the dollars it said were being paid in the defense budget because blue-collar workers were being paid "wages those paid for comparable workers in private industry."

Influence, however, the Senate Finance Committee was not to act, because legislative jurisdiction over these blue-collar workers is the House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees, two that historically have been the demands of Government workers.

The subcommittee that would have repealed the Administration's pay reform is headed by Sen. William Clay, Democrat, who before his election was representative for the St. Louis area. He has close ties with labor unions. He held a few days of hearings on the workers, but only as Representative Henderson observed, "the Administration on why they are paid more."

Panel Too 'Bury' He explained that the Senate said no hearings because it was "considering subsidies for service."

Several committee members acknowledged that an underlying reason for the Congressional indifference to the Administration's cost-saving program is a politically motivated desire to take any action in an election year that alienates a large bloc of voters.

Pay provisions have the effect on the Defense Department that it is the biggest employer of blue-collar workers. Of the 35,000 workers on the Federal Defense Department employ 35,000 at an annual cost of $1.1 billion.

Blue-collar workers are paid wages comparable to those in the private sector by the comparability formula worked out by Congress. The formula generally end up receiving wages, according to studies by the General Accounting Office and the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The base used for determining pay is the base used for determining pay in the private sector. Within each wage grade has ordered that there be steps, depending largely upon the determining pay comparability. About 75 percent of the workers are in the fifth pay step. As a result, workers receive more than the comparable pay figured out on the second-step level.

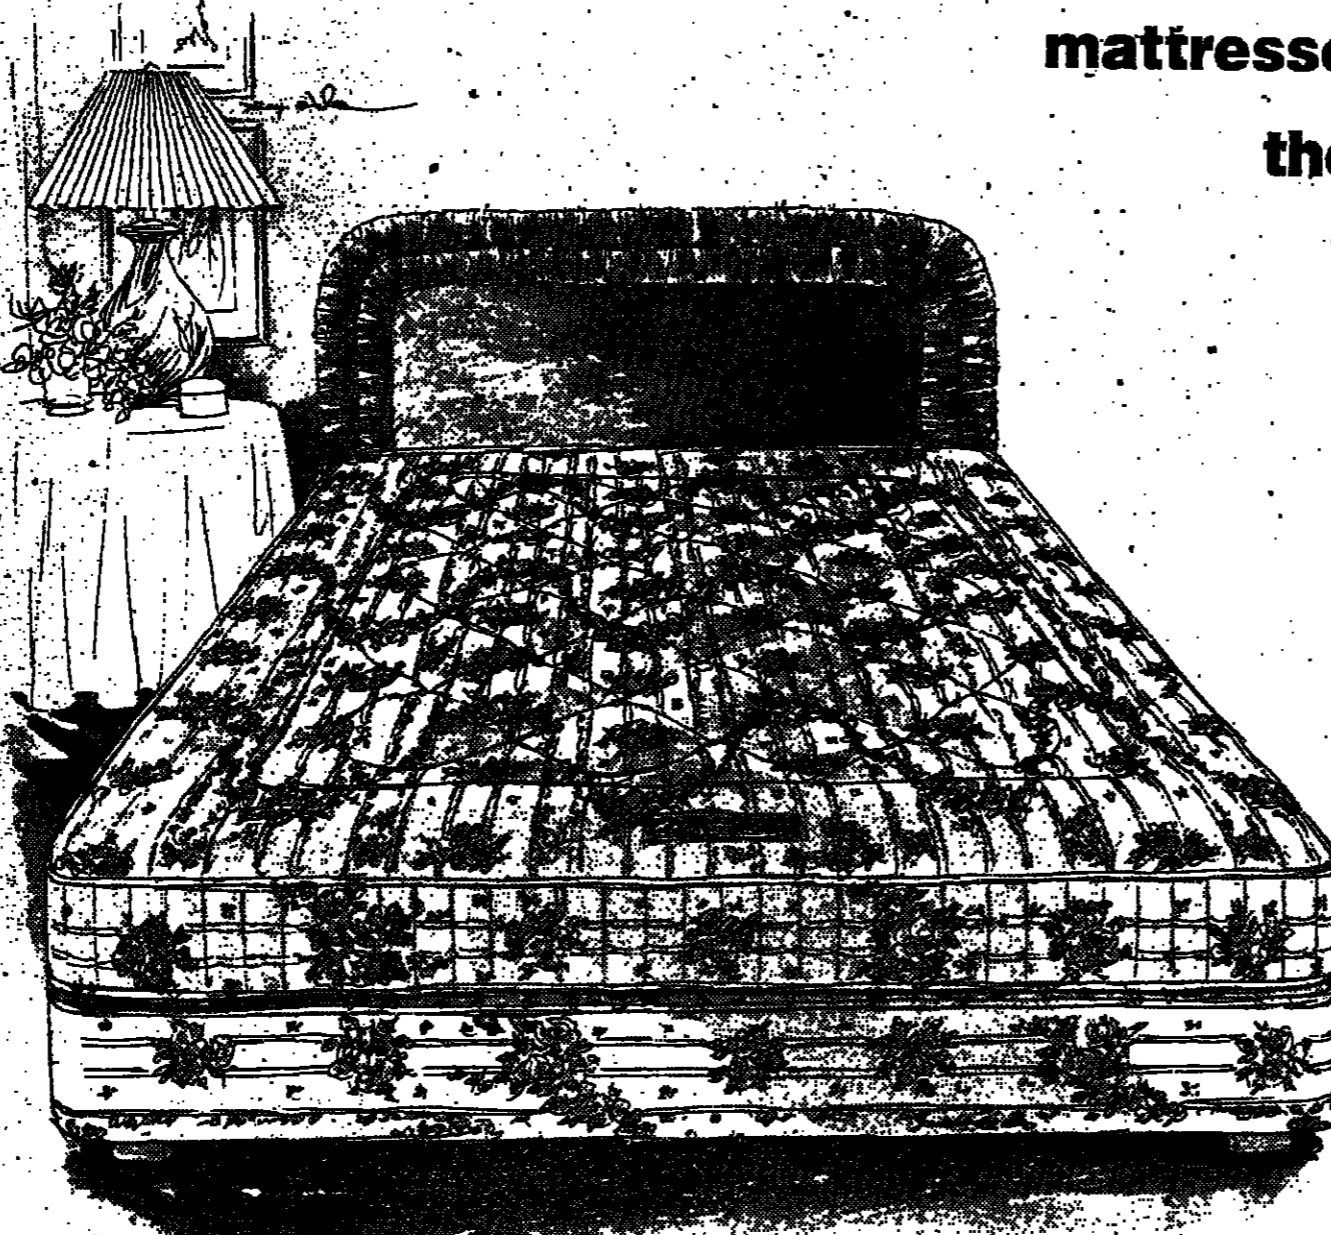

The pay benefit arises from the Monroney amendment. The benefit that for specialized skills, management wage board, may go outside the area in determining the wage in private industry. The benefit is a formula that gives workers higher overtime pay than generally given employees in the private sector.

In effect, the Senate Appropriations Committee noted, is that the blue-collar workers are not only receiving more than those in private industry have been receiving greater benefits than Federal workers in private industry.

The Administration has recommended that special pay benefits be repealed. The result would be a $337 million in the fiscal year 1977, $1.3 billion in 1978, $1.6 billion in 1979, and $1.6 billion in a cumulative five-year saving of $5.7 billion.

Democrats on Joint Panel Say Congress May Have to Spur the Economy Next Year

By WINN L. DALE Jr.
Sept. 25 — Majority Democrats on a Congressional Joint Committee concluded today that the economy would probably have to be spurred to spur the pace of the economy and keep the price heading downward.

factory outlook." They continued: "We recognize that the adoption of major new initiatives will in all probability await the outcome of the November elections and the convening of a new Congress in January." The Democrats said, "New steps taken early in 1977 could begin to have important effects on the economy by midyear. With many observers expecting the economy to weaken further after mid-1977 and to be quite weak in 1978, such action would be timely."

though one suggestion was a reduction in the income tax in the form of a credit against both employer and employee deductions for Social Security. A Republican minority report did not address directly the question of whether new stimulus for the economy would be desirable next year, but the minority took a slightly more optimistic view on the outlook than the majority. The Democrats said repeatedly that with the present margin of idle men and machines in the economy, stimulative action presented little danger of worsening the rate of inflation and might even reduce it. Assessing the outlook, the majority said: "Estimates prepared by the staff suggest a growth of real output of only 4 1/2 to 5 percent next year. This estimate, which falls within the range of available private forecasts, implies only the most limited reduction in unemployment. The unemployment rate would still be well above 6 percent at the end of next year and could be as high as 7 percent."

Improvement From Initiatives' The report added that "new policy initiatives, if adopted promptly, can bring about a significant improvement in the outlook." In a statement coinciding with the expressed views of Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, the majority said that "steady progress toward full employment should be an urgent goal of national policy over the next four years." The report continued: "Real output growth of about 7 percent in the near term, tapering to about 5 percent by 1980, is needed to bring the economy into the zone of sustainable full employment operation within this period. The losses of output and income which will result if the economy falls short of this objective should not be tolerated."

Utilities in Connecticut Advised On Repairs After Hurricane

HARTFORD, (AP)—The State Public Utilities Control Authority said Connecticut utilities generally did a good job restoring service after the hurricane struck last month. But the regulatory agency said its investigation had found that the companies' response was "by no means perfect." Nearly 300,000 businesses and homes lost electrical and telephone service when the hurricane struck. The total cost of restoring service for Northeast Utilities, United Illuminating and the Southern New England Telephone Company was about $4.5 million, the agency said.

Miners, in Anti-Communist Move, Expel Some Reporters at Parley

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

debate over alleged "Communists" in the union and among newsmen reporting on the United Mine Workers convention here interrupted the proceedings for hours today and led to the expulsion of half a dozen correspondents for left-wing publications.

The anti-Communist outburst on the floor at Cincinnati's Convention Center followed a bitter attack against the leadership of Arnold R. Miller, the former West Virginia coal miner elected president of the union in 1972. The attack came yesterday in a speech by Mr. Miller's own vice president, Mike Trbovich. Mr. Trbovich told the 2,000 delegates that "radicals, socialists and Communists" had infiltrated the union staff and were "running the president like a puppet."

Later, Mr. Trbovich acknowledged that he could not prove his charges. He has been regarded as a potential challenger to Mr. Miller in the U.M.W.'s presidential election next year, but the hostile reaction given him by the convention yesterday appeared to have ended his hopes. When the convention opened this morning, a group of delegates insisted that attention be shifted from coal-mine health and safety issues to a resolution ordering the expulsion of two reporters for The Call, a Chicago-based weekly tabloid published by the October League, a Maoist splinter group opposed to the Communist Party of the United States.

Charge Rules Were Broken

The reporters were accused in the resolution of having distributed "Communist literature" in the convention hall corridors, a violation of ground rules for members of the press distributed to each reporter when credentials were issued earlier this week. The resolution was shouted approval and the press badges of the two reporters, Frank Hall and Ann Thompson, were immediately taken from them.

Later, when the two attempted to hold a news conference on the sidewalk outside the Convention Center, Miss Thompson was involved in a scuffle with an unidentified delegate. She and her colleague were chased along the sidewalk while their dropped literature, ignited by an angry miner, blazed up briefly on the sidewalk.

Reporters for The Daily World, the Communist Party newspaper, and The Militant, a paper of the Socialist Workers Party, also left the press area. Among them was Art Shields, a tall, white-haired Daily World reporter who has covered labor conventions for decades.

Many of the miners here are in a combative mood. There have been sporadic fist-fights on the floor and in and around the Netherland-Hilton, the convention's headquarters hotel. One top union official, Nick Helamandaris, the executive board member from New Mexico, was reported to have returned home yesterday after what was variously described as "an argument" and "a threat on his life."

Sought to End Debate

Mr. Miller, the convention chairman, tried to cool the "anti-Communist" passions on the floor today by calling several times for a motion to end debate on that issue and proceed with the complex health and safety discussion. Instead, the convention voted overwhelmingly to recess for 15 minutes "to clean house" and to give delegates time to take complaints to the credentials committee against alleged "card-carrying Communists." The U.M.W. constitution provides for the expulsion of union members who are proved, after a hearing, to be members of the Communist Party.

Later, the union secretary-treasurer, Harry Patrick, a former coal miner like Mr. Miller and Mr. Trbovich, called in a speech for a $10 million organizing campaign to broaden the union's growing membership. The union has gained about 50,000 members during Mr. Miller's four-year administration and now totals some 277,000 miners, active and retired.

Mr. Patrick said, however, that the union had contracts with coal companies covering only about 64 percent of the annual production, and that it had failed notably to make inroads among workers in the strip-mine industry now burgeoning in the Western states.

Mr. Patrick, who is regarded by many miners as a potential presidential candidate next year, received by far the most enthusiastic applause of any U.M.W. official who has spoken here so far.

Head of Crime Family Slain in L.I. By Gunmen Waiting Outside Home

Andino (Tony Note) Pappadio, a reputed leader of the Luchese crime family, was shot to death late Friday night outside his luxurious home in Lido Beach, L.I.

The 62-year-old underworld figure was gunned down when he walked across the street to check on a parked automobile in which his suspected assistants were sitting.

His wife, Rose, had parked their late model Cadillac in their garage and had entered their house at 121 Eva Drive when she heard shots and saw a maroon automobile drive away. She found her husband sprawled dead in a roadway.

Associates Questioned

Nassau County detectives under Inspector George Chiminti began questioning reputed criminal associates of Mr. Pappadio yesterday in an effort to establish whether his death resulted from an internal struggle for power.

Mr. Pappadio had long been listed by Federal authorities as a member of the crime family of the late Thomas (Three Finger Brown) Luchese, which was said to be active in bookmaking, loan sharking and labor racketeering.

In 1965, Mr. Pappadio was sentenced with another member of the Luchese family to two years in jail for refusing to answer questions before a Federal grand jury in Manhattan that was investigating organized crime.

Last summer Mr. Pappadio had been one of the principals in an inquiry by Federal and Suffolk County officials into alleged efforts by criminals to control key contracts in the construction of the Suffolk Meadows quarter horse race track, now being completed. The investigation proved inconclusive.

Crime Family Small

The crime family led by Mr. Pappadio is said by local detectives to be small in number. Although it had previously operated mainly in the garment district of Manhattan, it is believed to have shifted much of its activity to Long Island.

Mr. Pappadio had returned with his wife from an evening out when he was murdered Friday night. The family had two Cadillacs, and he had driven one off the driveway to permit her to put the one with which they had returned into the garage.

After parking the second car on a side driveway, he went to investigate the automobile in which his suspected assailants were sitting. His body was removed early yesterday to the Nassau county morgue in East meadow for autopsy.

Discrimination in Hiring Charged by Mrs. Norton in Broadway Orchestras

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

The city's Commission on Human Rights has said that musicians from minority groups are being systematically excluded from orchestras for Broadway musicals and that it will begin an investigation into the matter.

In disclosing that the commission will review recruitment and hiring practices for theater orchestras, Commissioner Eleanor Holmes Norton said that only four of 43 musicians in the orchestra for the current production of "Porgy and Bess" at the Uris Theatre were members of minority groups.

"The failure to recruit more blacks for the 'Porgy and Bess' orchestra," Mrs. Norton said in a statement, "is an especially dramatic example of an industry-wide pattern of severely restricted opportunities for minority musicians in Broadway musicals."

A public hearing planned by the commission is expected to pay close attention to what Commissioner Norton charged was in effect an old-boy system, under which musicians are hired by "word of mouth," personal contacts and recommendations that tend to confine recruitment for Broadway musical orchestras to predominantly white talent pools.

Officials for the production said that delays in getting the show to New York had made it difficult for the company to find qualified minority musicians.

"The score, as Gershwin wrote it, requires highly trained classical musicians," said Virginia Hynes, an assistant producer with Sherwin M. Goldwin Productions, which is co-producing the show with Houston Grand Opera.

"There are lots of wonderful black musicians in New York, but they are in great demand. Many blacks were contacted by the orchestra contractor, but they were unavailable," she said.

Code for Presidential and Congressional Campaign Efforts Proves Unenforceable for '76 Election

 of The New York Times

On Sept. 25, the long and complex set of rules that is controlling presidential and Congressional campaign efforts is tentatively unenforceable. It is tentatively unenforceable because it is not yet legally effective, and now, until about four weeks before the 1976 election, the regulations scheduled to be adopted by the Federal Election Commission are not yet in effect. The regulations, drafted by the Commission, will not become legally effective until the end of the month.

This means that Federal candidates, from President Ford and Jimmy Carter down to House nominees, can disregard the detailed commission rules without fear of punishment as long as they do not violate the broad outlines of the campaign law in effect for the first time in this election.

Among other things, the regulations specify the reports of income and spending that candidates must file, attempt to cap campaign independent spending in behalf of a candidate, explain how corporations and union political action committees can raise funds and describe how the new subsidy system for major-party Presidential candidates is to operate.

The commission and Congress share responsibility for this anomalous situation. The agency did not submit the proposed regulations to Congress until Aug. 3, and the lawmakers have not yet often enough since that time to put the code into effect automatically.

Under the law, commission regulations gain the force of law, without any Senate or House action required, 30 legislative days after submission to Congress. A legislative day is one on which both the Senate and House are in session.

As of Thursday, the last day when both houses were meeting, only 23 legislative days had passed since the regulations were sent to Capitol Hill. Even if both houses sit for six days next week—and they are eager to adjourn to campaign full time—only 29 days will have passed.

As a result, the campaign regulations will have to be resubmitted to the new Congress, which convenes on Jan. 3, 1977, and the 30-day waiting period will then begin all over again. Generally, both the House and Senate meet on about half the calendar days in any given month of the session.

The commission is prohibited from issuing advisory opinions interpreting the regulations until the regulations become law. As a result, it has been closing recent policy statements with the statement that they are "informational only."

For a time, the commission also advised all the recipients of its rulings that "no enforcement or compliance action should be instituted in this matter if your actions conform to the conclusions and views stated in this letter"—in effect a promise of immunity.

Now the commission has dropped this language. A spokesman said that the members felt this pledge was "inappropriate" and "better left unsaid."

The election commission's efforts to put a code into effect in time for the 1976 election have been plagued by delay from the beginning. Congress created the agency in mid-October, 1974, but the members were not appointed and confirmed until the following April.

The commission did not send its first two regulations to Congress until the fall of 1975, and one was voted down by the Senate and the other by the House. In January 1976, the Supreme Court ruled that the commission had been unconstitutionally constituted, and Congress did not repair the damage with new legislation until May.

LAG ON ARRAIGNMENTS PENALIZES INNOCENT

tem," said Judge Ross, who is also a State Supreme Court justice and is in charge of all city criminal and civil courts. "We now have the danger of cases later being thrown out, and there is the problem of safeguarding constitutional rights," he added.

"It makes for poor justice and it is much too expensive because it creates additional court costs and police costs for New York."

Judge Ross said the delays had become most severe in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx.

Eugene Gold, the District Attorney of Brooklyn, asserted that police reluctance to incur overtime costs and poor administration in their pre-arraignment processing of prisoners had created the sudden snags.

"It's a mishmash," Mr. Gold said angrily. "It's become so outrageous that we've had situations where, after a few days, the police couldn't find their prisoners."

Morgenthau Blames 'System'

Robert M. Morgenthau, the District Attorney of Manhattan and Mario Merola, the District Attorney of the Bronx, acknowledged that arraignment "hold-overs," or backlogs, were increasing. Both District Attorneys, however, declined to criticize the police.

Mr. Morgenthau said a recent spurt in the arrest rate was largely responsible for the Manhattan backlogs. Mr. Merola, citing budget cuts that resulted in the closing of courts and a reduction in court personnel, said "What's happening is disgraceful, but I blame the entire system."

Francis B. Looney, a deputy commissioner in charge of the Police Department's criminal justice section, said the charges of police mismanagement "are absolutely untrue."

Mr. Looney conceded that the work schedules of officers who made arrests were sometimes revised to avoid overtime at arraignments. But he denied that this added to the court delays. "The arraignment delays are increasing because of a rising arrest rate and because the judges can't hear the cases fast enough," he said.

Situation 'Getting Worse'

However, the administrative judge of Brooklyn's Criminal Courts, Richard A. Brown, said that last week hundreds of defendants were detained in police jails although judges in the borough had been available to hear cases. Last Monday alone, he noted, 249 defendants were imprisoned while awaiting arraignment processing.

"That's not an unusual situation in Brooklyn any more, and it is getting worse," said Judge Brown, an acting State Supreme Court justice. "When these people come to court after such long delays, it creates a difficult and tense atmosphere. It is not my concept of justice."

Judges and prosecutors agreed that arraignment delays of two to three days were now normal, but no court records were available to pinpoint the average time between arrest and arraignment.

William J. Gallagher, the attorney in charge of the criminal division of the Legal Aid Society, estimated that most arraignments took at least two days. "A lot of times it takes three days, and we have instances of more—especially over the weekends when there are fewer courts in operation," Mr. Gallagher said.

'Can't Find' Detainees' Names

The society represents indigent defendants, who comprised about 90 percent of the 225,000 suspects who passed through the city's courts last year. Mr. Gallagher said he had never witnessed comparable delays during his 13 years with the society.

"Twenty hours was the most I had ever heard of before," he said, adding: "The problem has become so aggravated that I can't even find out from the police the names of people being detained, so as to bring writ to settle their release. And, don't forget many of these people may be innocent and they're going to be released at arraignment."

Several judges and court officers, who asked that their names be withheld, said that police officers had openly boasted that they were deliberately making arrests or slowing up the arraignment process in attempts to get overtime pay before a new police plan went into effect. Under this plan, which is expected to begin next month, many arresting officers will be excused from appearing at arraignments, thereby reducing overtime.

Judge Ross and police officials declined to comment on these charges. Judge Ross said, however, that in recent weeks the police "were coming in with a large number of petty cases." He added:

"If a cop is going to get himself $100 in overtime, I'd like it to be for a murder or a rape case—not on some minor matters that should never end up in the courts."

How Hearing Delays Affect the Innocent

Judges in Brooklyn cited two cases last week to illustrate how arraignment delays complicated the lives of suspects who might be quickly acquitted.

A mechanic was wrongly arrested for auto theft after he had legally repossessed a car in lieu of a debt. It took the police three days to process his case before it was brought to court and dismissed by the judge.

In another example, a 30-year-old Bay Ridge man was wrongly held on charges of assault and resisting arrest. At arraignment it was brought out that he was an off-duty auxiliary police officer who had been trying to resolve a family argument in a neighbor's apartment. The "good samaritan" auxiliary policeman spent two and a half days in a police lockup.

Divinity Schools Get Grant

The Kresge Foundation has awarded a $100,000 grant to Colgate Rochester Divinity School-Bexley Hall-Crozer Theological Seminary, an ecumenical "cluster" of divinity schools in Rochester, N.Y. The grant will increase the shelving capacity of the schools' Ambrose Swasey Library by about 14 percent. The library, with more than 180,000 volumes, is regarded as one of the foremost theological collections in the country.

STRIKE IS EXTENDED BY YORK POLICE

Union and Codd's Home Over Work Schedules

FRANAY GUPTA
New York City police officers testing against new work schedules extended their picketing yesterday to the homes of the Mayor and Police Commissioner.

The Mayor declined to support the action, but a spokesman for the Police Department termed the picketing in front of the Queens home of Mayor John Lindsay a "real cheap stunt" and said that the Mayor was attending a law conference in Florida yesterday. Members of his family were also present.

The picketing at both Gracie Mansion and the Mayor's home was peaceful. Officers carried placards demanding a return to the old work schedules and expressed displeasure with both officers and the Mayor.

The picketing dispersed by noon. Officers indicated they would return to work on Monday.

Mayor's station house at West Street on Friday.

Protests would also be held at other picketing centers around the city. About 700 police officers, wives and children gathered at the Gold Street station house in Brooklyn to picket the Bensonhurst section.

Protests Continuing
The Police Department's association negotiated with the city to break an attempt to break an 11 percent deferred salary increase. The city said the increase had dropped a sixth to 8 percent retroactively. The city would not afford a retroactive increase which it can absorb in the next fiscal year.

Reports of jamming of police officers in the Bronx. There were also reports of the issuance of traffic citations in response to radio calls. The Police Department in a row, refused to accept reports yesterday. How- ever, officials said last week that the city would be taken in caught tampering with the equipment.

It is reported to be mounting a case over the new work schedule which, in effect, officers would work 10 days additional. Douglas B. Weaving, the city's chief of police, has come under increasing pressure to prevent the new work shifts, which would go into effect next Sunday.

Union Talks Reported
The city was reported to be taking negotiations yesterday with the Police Association, which was represented by the First Deputy Police Commissioner Zuccotti. Some city officials said they did not expect an agreement. But other officials said progress was apparently being made and that an agreement between the P.B.A. could come in the next few days.

Meetings yesterday were held at the city's headquarters. But city officials said they did not expect to have highlighted the city with Dis- sented by the city with Dis- sented by the city with Dis- sented by the city with Dis-

The largest in the city. The city promised it had made to the city by agreeing to $15 million pay cuts, including a 10 percent reduction for new city employees. The P.B.A. did not agree to a one-year salary increase. The city is now appealing the court's decision in the Court of Appeals. City officials were reported to be attempting to persuade the city to retroactive pay. Deputy Mayor Zuccotti re- fused to support the P.B.A. at the moment. The P.B.A. said the city would have no choice but to raise the wages and unions began re- siding.

Education Commissioner Orders Rockville Centre to Integrate Racially Imbalanced School in the Watson attendance zone." Mr. Nyquist said that the school's enrollment was now 52 percent black while the districtwide elementary school enrollment was "only" 4.7 percent black. The order directing the district board to submit an integration plan to him no later than Dec. 1 was signed yesterday with the formal announcement scheduled to be made Monday. He acted in an appeal filed by several parents of pupils attending Watson, who contended that the Rockville Centre District was "maintaining the Floyd B. Watson Elementary School as a racially segregated school" and "providing an educationally deficient program of instruction at that school." Mr. Nyquist noted in his decision that local education authorities generally denied the contention of the parents who brought the appeal but conceded that I.Q. averages, achievement levels and reading and math scores were lower for the Watson students than for children attending the other schools in the district. The Commissioner added that the district had argued that special efforts were made to provide high quality education at the school, but he asserted that the efforts had been insufficient and that further steps were necessary.

Mr. Nyquist also said that the Watson school's parent-teacher association also generally agreed with the criticisms of those who filed the complaint. However, it offered an unusual opportunity to provide the association said that the school offered education that was both integrated and adequate and that no pupils attending the school should be assigned to other schools. Several Options Open Asserting that there were several options open to the district in formulating the required plan, the Commissioner's order said:

"The district as a whole is small and reassignment of pupils to any of several schools is feasible in many instances without involving excessive travel distances or hazardous street crossings, as in the case of the Watson, Morris and Hewitt attendance zones. The pairing of Watson and Morris is another possibility. Alternatively Watson could be designated as a magnet school, or continued as an elementary school with nonminority students assigned from the Morris and Hewitt attendance zones." Mr. Nyquist also stipulated that the plan should include a "local grievance procedure for parents who believe that the rights of their children to health, safety and quality education are imperiled, contravened or denied" as a result of reassignment under the plan.

1 Million in Overpayments To City U. SEEK Students Charged in Levitt Report

Overpayments estimated by state auditors to amount to $1 million were made to needy students in the City University's SEEK program in the 1973-74 academic year, State Comptroller Arthur Levitt charged yesterday. The bulk of the excessive aid was provided to students on welfare who either failed to list or underreported the amount of their welfare grants when applying for stipends from SEEK (Search for Education, Elevation and Knowledge), the 10-year-old program for economically and educationally disadvantaged students, Mr. Levitt said in an audit report. As a result of the improper income reporting, the applicants often received duplicate allowances from the city's Human Resources Administration, which provides welfare grants, and the financial aid offices of City University colleges to meet expenses for rent, meals, transportation, child care, medical needs and clothing. Controls to require reporting of welfare income and SEEK money to prevent the double allowances were inadequate both the university and the agency, Mr. Levitt charged. He said the cases of those applicants for SEEK funds who ignored requirements to list all their welfare aid were referred to the city's Department of Investigation "for the most part" on Mr. Levitt's recommendations for finer controls and "indicated that corrective action would be initiated."

The university, however, took exception to the sampling technique that the state auditors used to project the $1 million in overpayments. The overpayment estimate was based on a study of 106 of the 9,600 SEEK enrollees in the academic year. Of the 106, 21 failed to report $23,788 in direct welfare grants under the Homes Relief or Aid to Dependent Children category and ultimately received excessive SEEK stipends ranging between $188 and $1,000.

Jersey Boy, 6, Dies in Crash LAKEHURST, Sept. 24 (AP)—Tommy O'Neill, 6 years old, of Lakehurst, was killed yesterday when the car in which he was riding collided with a truck and slammed into a hot asphalt roller, the police said. The boy was in a car driven by Gerald Depillo of Morganville, who was hospitalized in satisfactory condition along with three other O'Neill children, Karen, Kelly and Kathy. The driver of the truck, Walter Rambo of Mount Holly, was not injured.

EASTERN EUROPE FOUND TO HAVE V.D. PROBLEMS

VIENNA, Sept. 24—Venereal diseases are spreading not only in the United States and elsewhere in the West, but also in the Communist-run countries of Eastern Europe, an international medical meeting here has found. Participants in the five-day conference—a Symposium on the Surveillance and Control of Sexually Transmitted Diseases—reported that Eastern European delegates showed remarkable candor in debates behind closed doors. On earlier occasions, representatives from Communist nations were reluctant to admit that their societies were also plagued by venereal diseases. Experts from East Berlin, Hungary and Poland spoke quite openly about these things and about the high proportion of homosexuals in the areas, said Robert R. Wilcox of Britain, an adviser to the symposium. Dr. Wilcox, like other specialists in the field, attributes an important role to homosexual activities in explaining the rising incidence of syphilis, gonorrhea and other illnesses that are transmitted by sexual contacts. In an interview, Dr. Wilcox pointed out that prostitution had long ceased to be the main source of venereal infections. He named growing promiscuity and permissiveness, and the mobility of such groups as tourists, soldiers, sailors, entertainers and airline personnel as factors contributing to the problem.

Apartment Union Ratifies Pact Local 32-E of the Service Employees Union ratified yesterday a new three-year contract providing a 3% raise across-the-board raise for 4,300 employees in 3,000 apartment houses in the Bronx. The contract, offered Thursday by negotiators for the Bronx Realty Advisory Board, also provides for increased welfare and pension benefits. The full membership of the management group must approve the agreement before it becomes effective.

TOUGHER LAW ON I.R.A. IS SIGNED IN IRELAND

DUBLIN, Sept. 25 (Reuters)—The President of Ireland has signed a new law imposing tougher penalties for membership in the Irish Republican Army, but he asked the Supreme Court to rule on the constitutionality of a second anti-guerrilla measure. President Cearbhall Ó Dálaigh said he was referring the Government's emergency-powers bill to the Supreme Court for a decision on whether any of its provisions are "repugnant" to the Constitution. The bill would enable police to hold guerrillas suspects for seven days without charge and would suspend normal constitutional rights of habeas corpus. The President signed into law a criminal-law bill that increases the maximum penalty for membership in the I.R.A. from two to seven years. It also raises from seven to 20 years the sentence for obstructing the Government in carrying out its duties. The two bills were pushed through Parliament by Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave's Government under a national state of emergency declared three weeks ago following the assassination of the British Ambassador to Dublin. The President's decision to send the emergency-powers bill to the Supreme Court means that it will be held up for at least two months.

Ex-Postman Held in Slaying NEWARK, Sept. 24 (AP)—A former postman has been charged with the fatal slaying of the man who reportedly had him dismissed, Roy Whitefield Jr., 41 years old, of Newark, surrendered to the police last night after allegedly stabbing Theodore Koerner, 63, of Irvington with a butcher knife at the Roseville branch of the Newark Post Office. Mr. Whitefield had been a letter carrier for 15 years until he was dismissed last January.

Senate Bars Income Tax Break For Renters of Apartment

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP)—The Senate has rejected a proposal that would have allowed apartment renters to deduct their share of their building's property tax bill from their income taxes.

Opponents prevailed yesterday on a vote of 41 to 29 to table the provision. One critic, Senator Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, objected because the bill would have allowed both the renters and the landlord to deduct property taxes.

A sponsor, Senator James L. Buckley, Conservative-Republican of New York, said that current tax law discriminated against renters because it allowed homeowners to deduct property taxes from taxable income, which reduces their taxes.

Jersey School Pact Reached

POINT PLEASANT, N.J., Sept. 24 (AP)—A tentative agreement has been reached to end the school dispute in this Ocean County community. Representatives of the teachers and the school board agreed yesterday on a new contract, but withheld details pending ratification.

Errors by Patients

The patients failed to take 18 to 19 percent of the drugs prescribed, took 19 to 20 percent more drugs than the doctors had prescribed and made inadvertent scheduling errors on about 17 percent of drugs. Only three percent of the patients did not take the drugs according to the prescription schedule even though they understood the prescribers' directions. In analyzing the reasons for these errors, the researchers found nothing about the patients—social class, educational background or other characteristics—to account for them. Nor were the errors related to the duration or severity of the patient's disease.

Jersey Stabilizes Fares On Subsidized Lines

Fares on New Jersey's subsidized rail and bus lines will remain at their current levels until at least July 1977, according to State Transportation Department officials. The officials had threatened to raise the fares substantially later this year unless the Legislature appropriated $13 million to close a projected deficit in the state subsidy program.

But Richard Anderson, head of the department's Division of Consumer Operations, said Friday that the threat of a fare increase had been averted because of a $6.9 million surplus the department had realized from the 1976 subsidy program. He said the surplus resulted from a number of bus companies that had been excluded from the program and from the failure of Hudson County bus lines to use their share of the subsidy because of labor disputes.

State Flu Vaccine Supply

A man in charge of New York State's swine flu inoculation program says there will probably only be enough vaccine to inoculate a little more than half the state's population. "Preliminary data indicate there is only enough swine flu vaccine for 55 percent of the state's population," said Clarence Wisecup, assistant swine flu project coordinator for the New York State Health Department.

Mr. Wisecup said Federal officials had been considering increasing production of the vaccine, but he said if additional vaccine were made available to New York it would probably not be until the end of December.

Youth Aids in Capture

An escapee from the Ulster County Jail in Kingston, N. Y., was seized in Bloomington, N. Y., by the police, but credit for the arrest was given to a 15-year-old boy. "It was actually David Dirks, a 15-year-old from Bloomington, who actually spotted him and kept us informed through his portable citizen's band radio," Sheriff Thomas Mayone said. He said the escapee, Charles Eberman, 25, of the Bronx was flushed out of a wooded area after a tip from Mr. Dirks.

An arrest warrant has been issued by the Suffolk County police for 44-year-old Sheldon Sager in connection with the deaths of his parents, Alfred Sager, 78, and Augusta, 72, and his sister, Jacqueline, 49. The three victims were found Friday murderer in their home in West Islip, L. I. Sheldon Sager, who lived with them, has been missing since last Tuesday, when he drove away in his father's car, the police reported. A nationwide police alarm has been sent out for him.

Warning Signs on Dam Ignored by U.S. Agency, House Panel Charges

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25 (AP)—The Federal Bureau of Reclamation ignored several warning signs that should have prompted it to halt construction of the ill-fated Teton Dam, according to a House panel.

The earth-filled dam in eastern Idaho collapsed on June 5, causing 11 deaths and property losses estimated at $1 billion.

A report by a House Government Operations subcommittee that investigated the collapse said Bureau of Reclamation officials, in their determination to build the Teton Dam, were "blinded to dangers and hazards" presented by the project. The Associated Press obtained a copy of the report today.

"The exact cause of the dam's collapse is not known," said the panel's chairman, Representative Leo Ryan, Democrat of California, in a statement prepared for release with the report. He added, "It was a manmade disaster that should be prevented from ever happening again at any other place in the future."

The report sharply criticized the Bureau of Reclamation's "compulsion or momentum to continue to build despite danger signals and warnings" adding, "The Teton Dam is a prime example of fulfilling the momentum to build at any cost."

Among the warnings disregarded by the agency, the subcommittee said, was a memorandum prepared in January 1973 by geologists of the United States Geological Survey, pointing to potential seismic dangers in the area.

The report also said one of the bureau's own geologists told the Teton project engineer at the outset of construction that it was not a good site, but neither man reported this to his superior.

Another warning sign apparently ignored, it said, was the finding of cracks and fissures in rocks underlying the site, which were far bigger and more numerous than expected initially.

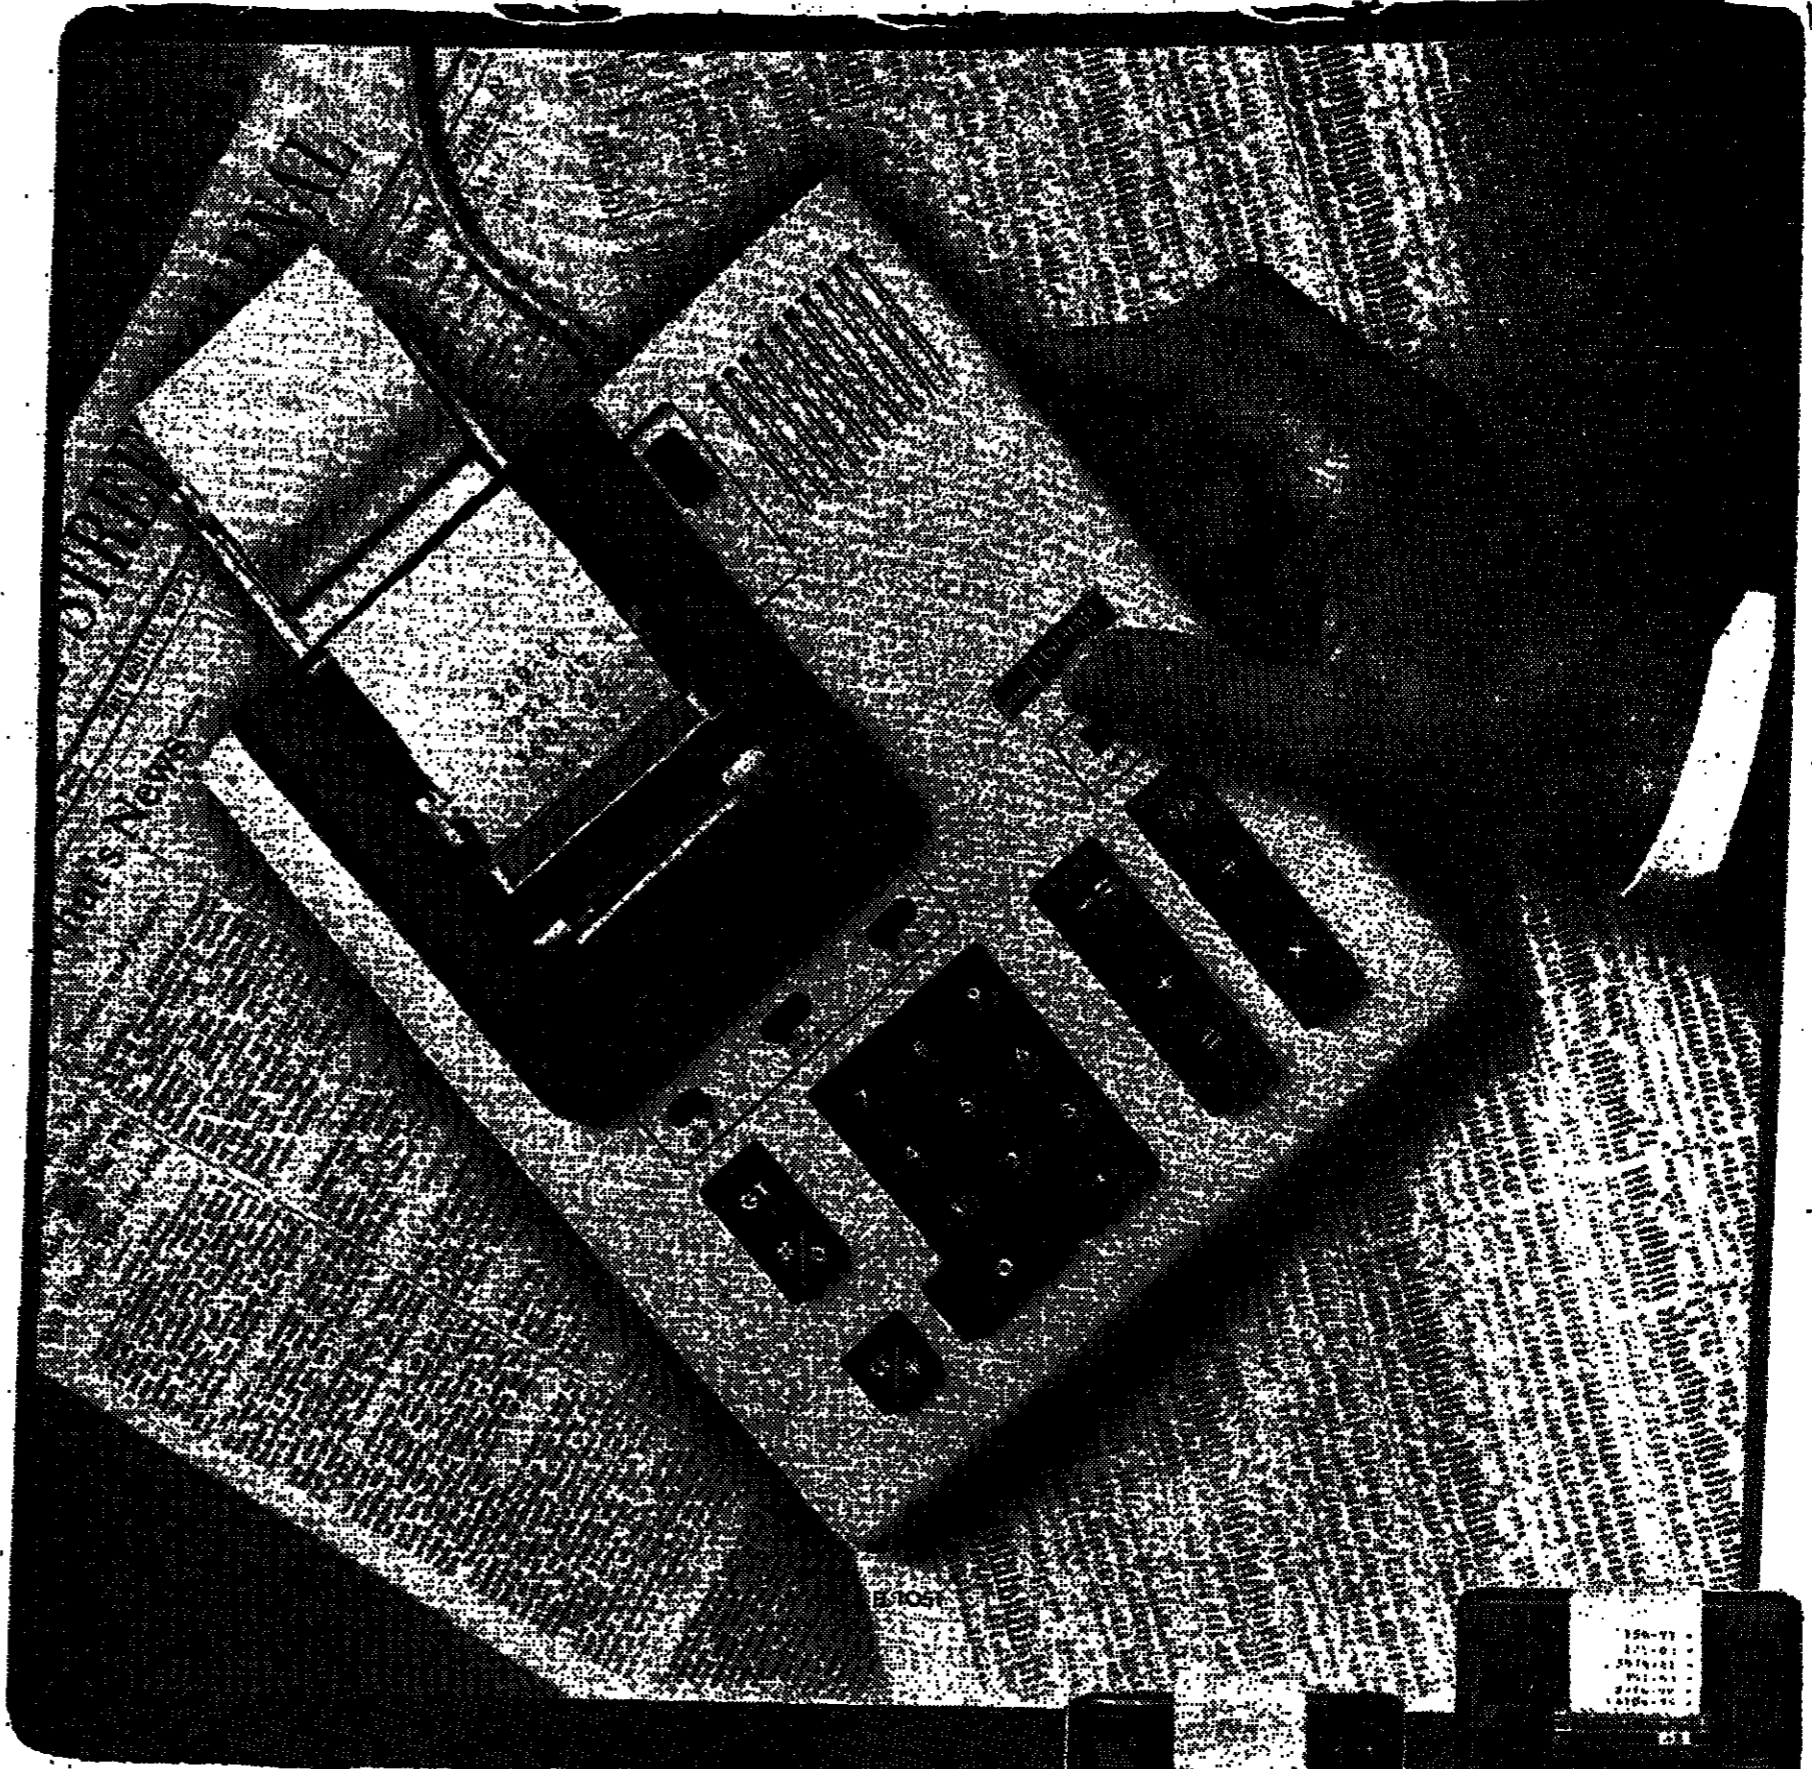

Teen-Ager Again Pleads Guilty To the Slaying of a Yale Student

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 25 (AP)—Melvin Jones, whose previous plea of guilty to murdering a Yale student had been rejected because of plea-bargaining guarantees, pleaded guilty Wednesday without guarantees.

Mr. Jones, 18, of New Haven, was one of six teen-agers charged with the murder of Gary Stein, a junior from Irvington, N. Y., during a sidewalk robbery in December 1974. He admitted before Judge Robert Callahan of Superior Court that he had fired the shotgun that killed young Stein. He entered his plea just before his murder trial was to begin.

The defendant's first guilty plea, in return for a recommended sentence of 11 years to life, was rejected in June by Judge Angelo Santaniello because of Mr. Jones's poor record.

Another defendant in the case has been sentenced to 17½ years to life. The maximum penalty for murder is 25 years.

Housing Construction in City Expected to Rise to Lowest Level of Great Depression

By JOSEPH P. FRIED
 The pace of housing construction in New York City is expected by state officials to rise more than 50 percent this year—but all the increase would do is to bring the pace up to the lowest level of the Great Depression of the 1930's.
 Last year, housing-construction activity in the city had sunk to a rate even below that at the bottom of the Depression in 1932.
 Meanwhile, in the suburbs of Long Island and Westchester and Rockland Counties, housing construction also remains far below the productive years of the early 1970's. But amid the overall decline, the situation is still relatively improved in Suffolk, where one-fifth of all the residential construction permits approved so far this year in New York State have been issued.

 The latest housing construction trends are based on state figures for residential-building permits issued in the first seven months of this year. Such permits are a key indicator of housing-construction activity.
 In recent years the decrease in housing construction has been far more precipitous in New York City than in the country generally, with the city and state fiscal crises becoming the major factors.

Construction Permits
 Residential construction permits issued in the city plummeted by almost 90 percent between 1972 and 1975 from 36,000 units authorized in 1972 to 3,900 last year. (A unit is a single-family home or an apartment in a multiple dwelling.)
 Thus, a new projection by state officials that the number of units authorized in the city this year would rise to 5,800—53 percent over last year's level—evokes little rejoicing from the officials or anyone else associated with the local housing scene.

 The 5,800 would be barely more than the 5,347 units authorized in 1932, the rock-bottom Depression year for housing production in the city.
 Moreover, the relatively strong sectors as reflected by building permits in the city this year are limited—construction of one-family and two-family homes in Staten Island and creation of new Manhattan apartments by converting commercial and factory lofts to housing.

 The conversions, fostered by a city program involving property-tax abatement, are considered new housing construction by state officials, although some builders do not consider them as reflecting an improved investment market for new housing generally.
 Overall in the city, nearly 3,000 units have been authorized for construction during the first seven months of this year, 22 percent more than in the comparable period of 1975.

In New York State as a whole, seven months this year is virtually the same—about 19,000—as in the comparable 1975 period. The officials expect an increase of about 5 percent in wide authorizations for 1976 as a whole—33,800 this year compared with 32,000 last year.
 The city and state fiscal crises helped make the decrease in housing construction far sharper in New York City than in the country generally, cause the crisis has forced the state to suspend housing programs that have been a major source of financing for residential projects in the last two decades.

Riches

Best prize in any lottery history—$92,352 a year for C. Leek, a 25-year-old North Arlington, N.J., resident who won it last Jan. 27. "I hope I can help a lot of people," he shouted at New Jersey Lottery Drawing. "I want to build a youth center for the kids off the streets."

The state checks have been arriving "like clockwork every 13 weeks," and "it's changed me quite a bit," Mr. Leek says. "It's made me more relaxed," he explains. "I've put on about 10 pounds. I've become more educated by travel—Europe, Mexico, the Bahamas. I find a lot of leisure time on my hands. I'm taking flight lessons for a private pilot's license." But the youth center has yet to be built. "I have met a few times with the Board of Recreation in North Arlington," Mr. Leek notes. "They say it's been a goal of theirs for a long time. But the townspeople apparently oppose it. They all say it's great, but they don't want the center anywhere near them." That's been one disappointment in instant wealth, Mr. Leek says. Other adverse effects: "pressure from the news media . . . the hassle of running into people and explaining the feeling of salesmen hammering on the door. . . I was forced to move." "In a way," Mr. Leek says, "I kind of regret saying that I could help a lot of people, because the people took it literally. I received maybe 15,000 letters from all over the world from people asking for a handout." Police Name Tags When New York City's policemen were forced to begin wearing name tags in January 1975, they said it would expose them and their families to harassment by "cop haters." Civil rights groups contended it would deter police brutality through easier identification of policemen. The Police Commissioner argued that it would improve community relations. Howard Morse, the director of community relations for the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, reports: "There has been an intermittent flow of cases in which policemen's wives have got harassing phone calls."

On the brutality issue, Deputy Inspector James R. McGowan of the Civilian Complaint Review Board says: "I'm the complaint supervisor here; and I didn't see any increase or decrease in complaints or even use made of name tags. The public is still reporting any police violations by shield numbers." At Police Headquarters, Deputy Commissioner Francis J. McLaughlin observes that "there's no way of measuring" the effect on community relations. A Smoke-Free Job The right to work in an area free of tobacco smoke was upheld in Superior Court in Atlantic City six months ago after Donna M. Shimp, a service representative for the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company complained of respiratory irritation from a co-worker's cigarettes. After noting that the phone company prohibited smoking near sophisticated equipment, Judge Philip A. Guccio issued a temporary injunction banning all smoking in the room where Mrs. Shimp worked. "If such rules are established for machines," the judge said, "I see no reason why they should not be held in force for humans." The injunction still stands, and New Jersey Bell does not appear in a hurry to contest it. For several months, the company has said only that it is "in process" of preparing a reply. RICHARD HAITCH

Landlords in Westchester Agree to End Sex Discrimination in Renting

By JAMES FERON
 Special to The New York Times
 WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 24—Westchester apartment-building owners agreed today to end sex discrimination in renting apartments, by counting the income of men and women equally when determining financial qualifications.

Under a consent judgment signed by Judge Constance Baker Motley in United States District Court in Manhattan, the owners also agreed not to refuse to rent to "working mothers, single women or single parents" or to impose different rental terms or standards because of sex.

The agreement—between the Department of Justice and the Builders Institute of Westchester and Putnam Counties and its Apartment Owners Advisory Council—ended nearly a year of investigation into charges of discrimination by some suburban landlords.

Although the agreement did not cite a complainant, referring only to "John Doe, Jane Doe and other unknown individuals," it noted that the council had "strongly suggested" in its rental recommendations that landlords "not consider the income of a wife under 35, or of single children" in considering applications because "this income is easily lost to the applicant."

The council's rental standards also had suggested that owners "limit the number of children who will be left unattended in your building." These standards, the Attorney General's office argued, "had the effect of making dwellings unavailable on account of sex," a violation of the Fair Housing Act of 1968 as amended by the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

Three Main Recommendations

The agreement contains three major recommendations, that the council will make to owners in the way they compute the family income necessary to qualify financially for renting an apartment. They are:

1. Treat income produced by a wife in the same manner as income produced by a husband and combine both spouses' income, including part-time employment,

2. "Include income from alimony and child-support payments where such income can be verified as consistently received or likely to be received in the future."

3. "Do not refuse rental to an individual because that individual is a working mother or a single parent."

'Act of Good Faith' Cited

George Frank, executive vice president of the Builders Institute and the Advisory Council, said: "We agreed that even without a complainant there could be a possible discriminatory pattern in our old recommendations, so we consented to tell everybody that we are now acting in good faith."

The agreement calls for the council to advise adoption by its members of "revised rental standards which will affirmatively promote equal opportunity in housing without regard to sex, race, color, religion and national origin." Landlords had been accused by the Government of following rental standards that had "the purpose and effect of discrimination against individuals on the basis of sex."

Mr. Frank said he felt that the Westchester council had been selected as it had an established record. "We were among the first in the highly praised as antidiscriminatory in the 1950's," he said. Sex discrimination was not an issue at that time.

New Application Forms

Under the consent agreement, the council is required to offer new rental application forms to its members, to have them at least twice a year in national seminars and to inform the community, which includes District Council members, that "dwellings rented by or for race, color, religion, sex or national origin."

The council also agreed to keep forward complaints of discrimination and to keep the Government informed of actions for three years.

Pear and Apple Trees Upstate Are Devastated by Fire Blight

By HAROLD FABER
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Sept. 25—An epidemic of fire blight, a bacterial disease that devastates pear and apple trees, has been spreading this year along the south shore of Lake Ontario, one of New York State's major fruit-producing areas.

The disease, which over the years has devastated the pear industry of New York, also poses a problem for fruit-growers around the world, according to reports at a three-day international conference on fire blight, which has just ended in Ithaca.

"Fire blight is now of worldwide importance," said Prof. Steven V. Beer, a plant pathologist at the State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell University, a sponsor of the conference.

First discovered in the Hudson Valley about 200 years ago, the disease was given its name because of the scorched appearance of the trees. Farmers at the time believed that the trees had been hit by lightning, but later research at Cornell demonstrated the bacterial cause of the disease.

Trees that are affected do not produce fruit.

From Five Countries
For a long time, fire blight was restricted to North America, but in 1919 it was discovered in New Zealand and more recently in England and in northern Europe. Fifty researchers into the disease from five countries—the United States, Canada, Britain, West Germany and the Netherlands—attended the conference.

So far fire blight is not a major problem in Europe—this year because of the drought there—but the fruit experts express concern that it might spread south to the major fruit-producing areas. At the moment strict quarantine regulations in Europe prohibit the importation of fruit or nursery stock from infected areas.

The experts got a firsthand view of the devastation that fire blight could cause in a visit to commercial orchards in Wayne County, the major apple and pear-producing county in the state. As many as 10 percent of the apple trees and 25 percent of the pear trees have been touched in Wayne, Orleans and Monroe Counties.

Two adjoining counties, Niagara and Oswego, have been hit less severely, although orchards there have been hurt. However, in the Hudson Valley, the state's other major fruit-producing area, only a few cases have been reported.

The impact of the disease has been greater this year on apple growers than pear growers, mainly because over the years fire blight has all but wiped out New York's once-flourishing pear industry. Most of the pears consumed by New Yorkers now come from the West Coast.

Spread in Wet Weather

Professor Beer described the situation as the most serious since 1972, when fire blight spread through the fruit belt in the wake of the tropical storm Agnes. The disease flourishes sporadically in wet years, spread by rain or insects. When the blossoms come out, pollinating bees spread the disease from blossom to blossom.

"Once trees are infected, growers have no recourse short of cutting out diseased branches to prevent infections from moving deeper into the tree," Dr. Beer said. "Many infected trees may be rehabilitated, but it may take several years before such trees return to full production."

One of the major dangers in the future, according to the professor, is that dwarf trees in high-intensity plantings are more vulnerable than standard-size trees—and the fruit industry is moving rapidly toward the expansion of dwarfed tree orchards.

He also said that varieties of apples differed widely in susceptibility to fire blight. Both major apples in the United States, McIntosh and Red Delicious, are less susceptible to damage than Rhode Island Greenings, Jonathan, Twenty-Ounce and Ida Red, for example.

Talents of Handicapped Children Being Developed in Connecticut

Special to The New York Times
HARTFORD, Sept. 25—In Connecticut, a rather large new pool of undeveloped artistic talent has been discovered where it had scarcely been looked for before—among seriously handicapped children.
The state has long had good programs to develop high creative potential among schoolchildren where it was found to exist, but only in the last year has a serious effort been made to look for these talents among children who have learning disabilities or emotional disturbances, or who are so crippled or palsied they cannot work or talk or hold a pencil to paper.
By extensive and innovative testing, it was found that 12 percent of the handicapped children who were studied were gifted; roughly three times as many as in the general school population, according to the same, largely subjective norms.
"This is just conjecture, but some of these kids may have developed problem-solving skills as a kind of compensating mechanism," said Alan J. White, who is director of the effort, called Project SEARCH, an acronym for Search for Exceptional Abilities Reachable among Children with Handicaps.
The project is being financed by the Federal Government, and has been conducted so far among handicapped children served by the two regional educational agencies in Connecticut with the largest concentrations of children—the Area Cooperative Educational Services in the New Haven area, and the Capitol Region Educational Council in the Hartford area.
The first surprise for the people in the project was that two-thirds of the handicapped children they had access to were capable of being tested. They had expected to be able to test a quarter of them at most.
Other handicapped children in smaller groups were also tested, but of the 331 children from the two regional agencies who were tested, 278 were assessed. Of those, 34 were found to be gifted—just over 12 percent.

"This group has exceptional potential for growth and training and creative activity in the arts," Mr. White said.
He suspected that families and teachers looked too seldom for the creative spark that might be there, because they spent all their agony and attention on the child's handicap.
"They look for the defects and try to bring these up to strength," Mr. White said. "When a child does have a strength, the parents turn away from it and say, 'Thank goodness we don't have to do anything about that.' My feeling is we should be building on those strengths."
Disability Is Considered
The test to find those strengths were based on the creativity test developed for normal children by Paul Torrance of the University of Georgia.
Basically, the people in Project SEARCH had to take account of each child's special disability—his hearing impairment, or lack of muscle control, or inability to cope with numbers or sequences.
Some children were asked to explore the sound-making properties of things in their classrooms, and then to combine the sounds and develop compositions.
With cut-outs of semi-abstract and realistic objects, a child with limited eyesight was asked to use his fingers to feel different parts of the bodies to express emotions and make responses. Some were asked merely to move their heads or to get across the room in an interesting and novel way.
"The idea was to get as many views of the child as we could," Mr. White said.
The obvious next steps for Project SEARCH are to develop the talents that have been discovered, and to begin to search out the handicapped children who are gifted in other ways—academically, mechanically or otherwise.

Builder Follows Old Methods

OK, Conn., Sept. 25 (AP) — He doesn't do any business over the phone, and even had the phone taken out.

The best customers, he says, are the ones who drive right into his Brockway Boat Works yard on the Connecticut River.

A 5-foot-6 man whose clothes are often spattered with red, white and blue paint, Mr. Brockway is likely to greet visitors with the admonition: "If you just want to look I'd rather keep working. But if you want to talk business I'll stop right now."

His boats used to be built with planks of cedar over oak frames, but now he uses marine plywood.

Plywood was once unthinkable, he says, but stronger waterproof glues were developed and plywood now will "take a lot of pounding."

Mr. Brockway said he hasn't had a vacation for the last five years and doesn't have time to do much reading except for The Wall Street Journal.

"I still have a few investments; I manage them myself and you know, it's almost a full-time job," he said.

Response to a Police Appeal for Horses Is Called 'Overwhelming'

By FRANK J. FRIAL

The public response to a New York City Police Department request for gift horses for its mounted units has been "fantastic" and "overwhelming," the department said yesterday.

Horse owners from Canada to Texas and from Long Island to Nevada have responded to the policemen's plea. The police want replacements for about 20 horses considered too old for service.

Lieut. Richard Risoli, commander of Mounted Troop C, who originated the drive, said one Takam, who preferred to remain anonymous, had offered to supply all the horses the department needed. "He said all we had to do was pick them out," Lieutenant Risoli said.

In the past, according to the lieutenant, the department accepted any gift horses and kept them, even if they were not suited for police work. "This time," he said, "we are setting pretty strict specifications. We know it's kind of cheeky, but it probably will avoid problems later."

The department wants black, chestnut or bay geldings, from 5 to 12 years old and in sound condition. The department has 78 horses for its three troops.

"When I came on mounted duty in 1962, we had 300 horses and seven stables," Lieutenant Risoli said. "No other city came near us."

He said a number of major cities in the country that had abandoned mounted police units, such as Cleveland, were bringing them back. "Philadelphia has almost 300 horses," he said. "They're the biggest of all now."

Retired Horses

Mounted policemen point out that they work only in high-crime areas and, because of their visibility, act as an important crime deterrent. "We make it seem like there are a lot of men on the street," Lieutenant Risoli said.

The horses to be retired will be sent to the department's farm in Otisville, N. Y., or will be given away.

"We get 200 to 300 requests a year for retired police horses," the lieutenant said. "People know they are well-trained."

"Some of the people don't even want to ride them. They just want to own a New York City police horse. They probably figure he's seen more than they'll ever see."

Lieutenant Risoli said he would like to get new horses before cold weather arrived so they could be trained outside at the department's training area in the Pelham Bay section of the Bronx. After the horses are trained, they will be matched with a rider and transferred to a troop. "Believe it or not, we actually try to 'match up personalities—the man's and the horse's," Lieutenant Risoli said.

He said he had planned all along to make his bid for gift horses at this time of the year. "A lot of kids go back to school after riding all summer," he said, "and the parents don't want to keep the horse all winter." He said a good police horse would cost more than $440.

The drive, which is actually run by the New York City Police Department, is also asking for cash donations. "That way we can buy the horses if the ones offered to us are good," the lieutenant said.

"If appropriate horses are found," he added, "the money will be used to buy equipment."

Donations to the police mounted for the mounted troops are tax deductible. Lieutenant Risoli said the idea how many horses and how much money had been donated "is changing every hour," he said.

IMPORTANT PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT from the Department of Housing and Urban Development to Certain Homeowners whose Mortgages were Insured by FHA between August 1968 and August 1976.

You may qualify for Home Repair Assistance or for Reimbursement for Repairs already made.

Section 518 of the National Housing Act as amended by the Housing Authorization Act of 1976 authorizes the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to compensate homeowners for certain serious defects which existed at the time of HUD's original inspection of the property.

- Read this notice carefully. If you qualify, you have a right to share in these benefits.
YOUR HOME QUALIFIES IF IT MEETS ALL OF THESE REQUIREMENTS OF THE LAW:
1. If it was more than one year old when purchased.
2. If your mortgage was insured by FHA under Section 203 (b) or Section 221 (d) (2) on or after August 1, 1968 but before August 3, 1976.
3. If the property has 1, 2, 3, or 4 living units.
4. If the defects are such that they would have been evident at time of original appraisal.
5. If your home is located in an older, declining urban area, defined as a community with a population of 2500 or more and a neighborhood mostly comprised of dwellings built before 1940.
6. All decisions as to eligibility will be made by HUD/FHA and such decisions are final.
DEFECTS THAT QUALIFY are those which so seriously affect use and livability as to create a serious danger to life or safety of the inhabitants. For example:
1. Seriously defective plumbing, heating or electrical systems.
2. A structural failure in the basic framing, floors or foundations which is visibly evident in an accessible area.
3. A worn out roof.
4. Drainage problems such as surface water in the crawl space or running against the house.
5. Rotted siding, porches, steps, deteriorated brickwork or other seriously deteriorated exterior surfaces which affect the structural safety of the house.
6. Defective paint conditions which as defined in HUD regulations, constitute a health hazard: cracking, scaling, peeling and loose lead-based paint on interior surfaces and those exterior surfaces, such as stairs, porches, windows and doors readily accessible to children under seven years of age.
For repairs already made you must be able to present proof that the defect existed when home was appraised. For example: receipts, cancelled checks, contracts or contractor's statements which will show that repairs were required immediately after purchase.

CLAIMANTS LED BY SYSTEM

How to Collect Judgment from Small-Claims Court

HEN T. McQUISTON
 A percent of the claimants as in the Queens County court over the last three years able to collect on court orders to a recent study. Winning and even winning claims court is relatively and inexpensive, the greatest by claimants remains frustrating system for claimants," according to Eric A. Clark of the study project, a survey by college students.

The study was conducted by the chapter of the New York Research Group. Its study surveyed claimants who filed claims cases in Queens County the first week of February and 1976.

The study showed that 43.8 percent of the 1976 sampling who won their cases, still had no recovery of their judgments from the and helpful. The study found that 10 claimants in all three Queens County court employees points to the court location and hours of operation. The forms were described as out, and most claimants felt that they were given sufficient information by the judge or arbitrator to their side of the case.

Problems arose in the collection of judgments despite highly publicized laws regulating small claims that took effect last September. Such laws were intended to help claimants.

The amendments provided for treble damages in cases where claimants who have three judgments against them. A claimant relieved small claims of having to pay sheriff's fees to the sheriff's seizing of property.

The study found that not one claimant could recall even one of the treble damages law, that other expenses, such as attorney's fees, still had to be paid by the claimant in advance of action by the judge or arbitrator.

Legislation Sought
 To solve the problem, the study suggested legislative changes to be enacted. Businesses to be sued must give their exact legal name or use in transactions with claimants would increase pressure on businesses to pay judgments to avoid the problem.

The study would be to fund money raised from businesses to be sued after collection; and a small claims court in Queens County to collect judgments. The receipt of judgments and the prospect of a trial is sufficient to get reluctant defendants to pay in cases with judgments of about 25 percent.

"It's right," said one claimant in the survey. "But that makes any difference to me when the landlord got the court that I was immediately got a call from what all the fuss was about."

Check Sent
 However, refused to return the check the day before the trial, so that she would return her son over in that a certified check. In the meantime, the lawyer's money back but the threat of court action.

She successfully sued and the problems of collection at the sheriff's office, which is a failure of claims execution. The reason is that claimants that it is their responsibility to provide the necessary information of the defendant's address.

When a bank account is opened, and this is a lawyer's assistance, claimants have not been given exact legal name, making it difficult for the defendant to choose not to pay.

The study showed that 15 percent of the survey showed accident cases accounted for 21 percent, or for more than any other area in the small claims court. Most were collectible individuals. Because a claimant is unable to sue in small claims court, the courts are primarily a tool for justice.

Substantial Justice
 The most frequent type of case in small claims court is tenant disputes with the landlord.

The study showed that 21 percent of the cases actually went on to trial. In the 1976 sampling, 21 percent of the cases went to trial before volunteer lawyers or arbitrators.

The study showed that claims courts were created by the Legislature in 1934 and by the municipal system. The study showed that the court procedures are formal and expensive, and that hearings designed to provide substantial justice.

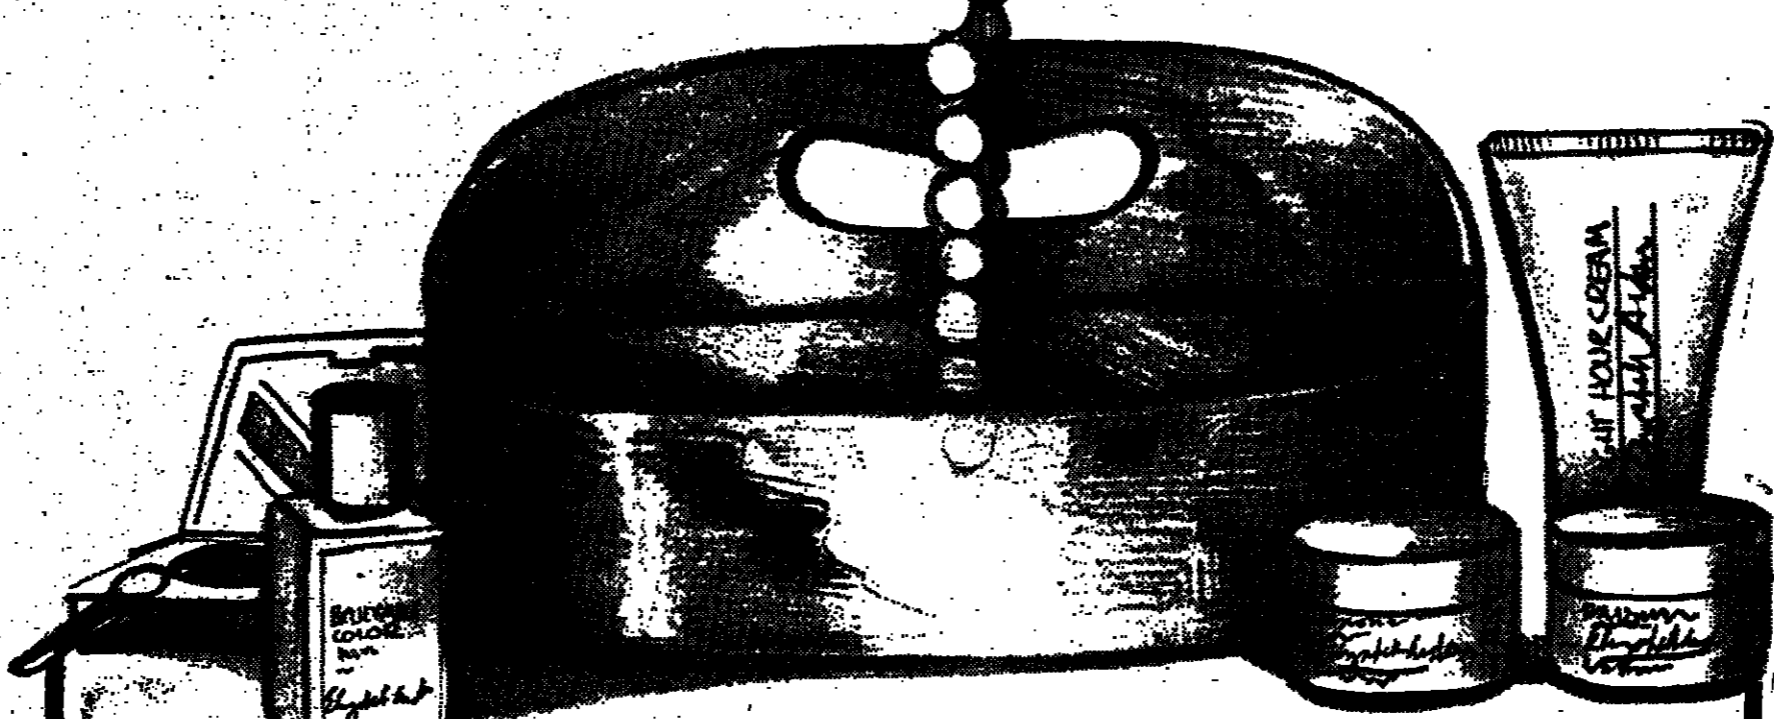

The study began his claims suit by filling out a simple form. The study showed that 48 percent of the claimants included the summons to the defendant.

The study showed that the defendant is notified, by mail, of the claimant's suit, which usually is set for a trial. The study showed that the claimant is given the chance to tell his story, usually without a judge or arbitrator, and to choose beforehand. The study showed that the case is mailed to both parties, and the responsibility of the claimant is to collect the judgment.

Chinese Rugs: Painstakingly Done

By LISA HAMMEL
It's because of TCNNP&ABPI&EC that there is now a large collection of Chinese rugs in New Jersey. That alphabet soup is not a terrible typographical error. It's the initials of The Chinese National Native Produce and Animal By-Product Import and Export Corporation. And that mouthful is the agency with which the New Jersey carpet chain, Einstein-Moomjy, has been working to bring over a sizable selection of Chinese rugs.

It's interesting to see what's coming out of China today. As with other articles, like the screens and furniture now being exported from that country, the workmanship is painstaking. The rugs are made in factories, but the knotting, or in some cases, tufting, is all done by hand. The fiber — wool, along with some goat's hair or silk — is of substantial weight. And the dyes, in colors ranging from soft pastels to bright primary colors, are clear in tone—even if a bit discordant.

There is a considerable variety of design. Most Oriental rug fanciers will recognize the traditional Chinese patterns, such as geometric medallions on a solid ground, bordered with geometric configurations and stylized flowers.

The surprise comes in the meeting of two cultures, what one might call the Chinese-European style. In these, the center medallions are full of animal life: cranes, peacocks and even cuddly black and white pandas, preening or cavorting amid flowers or alongside an occasional teahouse.

And then there is the style that looks almost like a Chinese watercolor. A particularly attractive rug in this manner has delicate, sculptured sprays of plum blossom strewn over the face of the carpet. This style, in rose and cream on an ivory ground or pale greens and beige on honey brown, has to be ordered from samples.

The store has also brought back a number of antique Chinese rugs, of great variety in their patterning, priced from under $1,000 to about $12,000. There are also a number of newly done tapestries, in the manner of Chinese painting.

The carpets, ranging from small area rugs to large room-size ones, start at $220 for a 2-by-3 and go to about $5,000 for a 10-by-14.

The rugs are now hanging on the walls and covering the second floor at the Paramus store of Einstein-Moomjy, 526 Routh 17. They will be on display from tomorrow through Oct. 9, but will continue to be carried after the exhibition ends.

Adornment For Male Of the Species

By ENID NEMY
Harry Platt, the well-groomed president of Tiffany's, wears a wrist watch and cuff links, neither of which he considers jewelry.

Mr. Platt is, however, on the verge of succumbing to men's jewelry. There's a collection coming up of which he thoroughly approves and it's going to be sold—where else?—at Tiffany's.

The jewelry will not only be available at Tiffany's tomorrow—it won't be anywhere else, the reason being that the store commissioned the designs, and is having them made in its own workrooms.

As might be expected, the designer is a prestigious one—Ralph Lauren. Mr. Lauren is in the Coty Hall of Fame for his men's wear, has won a Coty award for his women's wear, and is known for his good-looking designs that rarely look dated.

The Tiffany Theme
"His clothes have what we would call a well-bred, conservative look, and that's the Tiffany theme," Mr. Platt said. "He designs classics, and his jewelry will be just as good 50 and 100 years from now, as it is today."

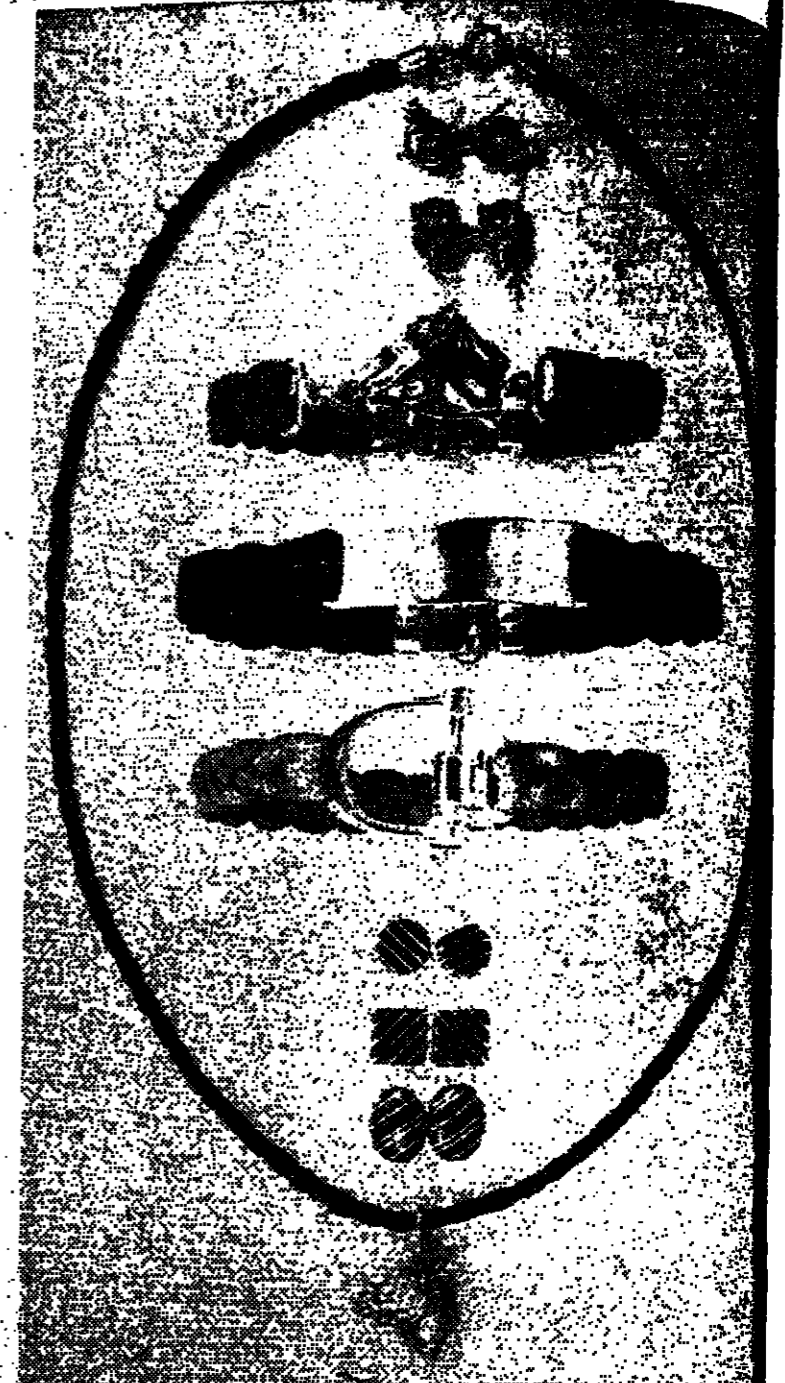

Because the collection is classic in design, Tiffany's is not planning seasonal additions.

"It will be a continuing collection," Mr. Platt said. "We will add pieces, but we don't discard the older designs."

The collection, all in sterling silver, 18-karat gold, enamel and leather, concentrates on two themes, equestrian and nautical. But there are also pieces for polo players, fox hunters, and men who do nothing more sporty than walking down Fifth Avenue.

A number of the wrist and neck designs combine braided leather in deep brown or tan with gold plaques, toggles or horseheads. There are polo mallets and helmets, and ruby-eyed gold foxes in studs and cuff links, and a whole group of gold neck chains with moveable pulleys or anchors (Danforth or traditional) that actually work the way pulleys and Danforths do work. Prices go from $165 to $375.

The most colorful group consists of nautical flags, based on the international code flags alphabet. The small enameled versions can be combined to form one's initials, or a short message, and can be worn on a wrist or neck chain.

With the increasing importance of shirts in women's wardrobes, the enameled cuff links, in six color combinations, may prove equally popular with both sexes. All the shapes—round, oval, square and cushion—are smaller than usual, which makes the $495 price tags even more startling, they'd normally be.

There are also some great 18-karat gold nautical blazer buttons, $100 and $165 each, depending on size, and at $17 to $27 for sterling. Tiffany's doesn't insure against heart attack if you lose one.

Close-Up:

The Foreign Film Scene

Festival time in New York inspires a critic to consider the traditions, triumphs and trends in foreign movies.

RICHARD EDER

Over the next couple of weeks there will be an impression around here that the normal order of forces in the movie world has been rearranged. Films, which usually dominate in promotion and if not in quality, will be submerged by a flood of something of an illusion. Tourists is not necessarily the best impression of the New York Film Festival, which is at Lincoln Center, is 16 carefully selected foreign films they will be seen on a kind of visa. The Festival, in fact, at Ellis Island, the arrivals are temporary, and are but they don't necessarily at year. A number of good were shown, were well received, after their Festival more or less died. Truffaut's of Adele H. went on to and enjoy a fairly successful run; the X-rated "Exhibition" prizes but got something anyway. But one splendid picture Herzog's "Kaspar Hauser" for a couple of weeks at work theater and vanished, and witty and highly entertaining "Echam Que Ca" never opened the Festival was over.

a question of public indifference for these films exists, overwhelming numbers, but an hardly see a movie that is shown; and they are ungo see a movie that is only or a week or two and is adwith the kind of display used a liter of unwanted kittens. It is, a great many good for-

Foreign movies do not get commercial distribution in this country. For one thing, it can cost as much as $100,000 for even a modest distribution effort and distributors will take what they regard as a risk of this sort only in a limited number of cases. In addition, the same tendency that makes the American film industry concentrate its resources on making and promoting a few big movies, rather than many smaller ones, works against foreign films, most of which are "small" by American standards.

Regional Theaters Spawning New Plays

By MEL GUSSOW

If one wants to look ahead to what plays will come to New York this season as well as in future seasons, one should check the schedule at, among others, the Long Wharf Theater in New Haven, the Arena Stage in Washington and the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles. It is from such regional theaters as these that so many significant new plays have come, such works as "Streamers," "The Changing Room," "The Great White Hope," "Moonchildren," "In the Matter of J. Robert Oppenheimer" and "A Texas Trilogy."

"No one wants to go on Broadway first," says Arvin Brown, artistic director of the Long Wharf. Mr. Brown's desk is flooded with manuscripts, many of them from people who apparently would prefer to have a new play open at Long Wharf. Mr. Brown shares this enviable position—with other heads of America's major regional theaters (and also, of course, with New York's institutional theaters such as the New York Shakespeare Festival and the Chelsea Theater Center). The fact is that more and more people—producers, playwrights, actors, agents, audiences—are turning their attention to regional theater.

Established playwrights who have had sour experiences on Broadway are learning a lesson from promising new playwrights and are having their work done in regional theaters, which can nurture plays into shape without facing commercial pressures (although, admittedly, regional theaters are increasingly in the spotlight). Last season Tennessee Williams was at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco with "This Is (an Entertainment)."

How 'Ragtime' Led to Discord

By CHARLES HIGHAM

It has been two years since the enterprising producer Dino De Laurentiis optioned "Ragtime," E. L. Doctorow's critically acclaimed and popular blend of fact and fiction, which featured imaginative renderings of such real-life figures as Harry Houdini, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and J. Pierpont Morgan. However, a movie has yet to be made of "Ragtime." Why? The answer lies in the interaction—and squabbling—of some of the best known and most admired talents in the entertainment industry.

Last year, De Laurentiis hired Robert Altman, who had demonstrated his flair for controlling a sprawling narrative in "Nashville," to direct "Ragtime." Altman, in a burst of enthusiasm, immediately hired Joaquin Phoenix as author of "Thieves Like Us" and "Nashville" to write the screenplay. Since then, both Altman and Miss Tewkesbury have left the project, and now Doctorow himself, who succeeded Miss Tewkesbury as screenwriter, has abandoned his effort to translate the elaborately plotted novel into a script of reasonable length though he has been retained in an advisory capacity. So De Laurentiis, who recently hired Milos Forman to replace Altman, is now in search of another screenwriter, and the question he has asked by many Hollywood observers is, "Will 'Ragtime' ever be made?"

Doctorow is reluctant to discuss the matter in detail and is apparently anxious not to antagonize De Laurentiis. Robert Altman has his own thoughts about Doctorow's reticence. "Doctor and I recently met in Palm Springs where I'm preparing my new picture, and he got mad at me. He accused me of deserting 'Ragtime' and said I should never have let Milos Forman do the picture. He said that Forman was no good for the picture, that I couldn't do it, I should have prevailed. Continued on Page 15

Are Art Exchanges a Game of Propaganda?

GRACE GLUECK

There are certain international loan exhibitions, such as the forthcoming "Treasures of Tutankhamun" from Egypt, actually attempts to exploit Americans for propaganda purposes. The U. S. State Department's dealings with foreign countries by facilitating the Tutankhamun—the Chinese archaeological exhibition of two years ago, and Russian extravaganzas? questions, recently raised are very disturbing to Peter the State Department's most trophy to the visual arts. Branding as "a serious misunderstanding of facts," he explains: "The fact that such shows are conceived in the corridors of the State Department is somehow foisted on a museum community. But that the ideas for them have in the museums themselves; the foreign policy connection is often made later in the form of an improved political climate that has sometimes led foreign governments to agree to exhibitions that have been sought unsuccessfully for a long time."

And—while acknowledging that politics are not entirely absent—the pooh-poohs the notion that such shows are propaganda vehicles for the foreign countries sending them. "It doesn't seem to me that a visitor who has spent some hours admiring masterworks of art from a foreign collection is likely to have his political views significantly altered. Of course, it's unrealistic not to allow that foreign governments feel such shows are in their interests, but they can serve more than one purpose. If we're to make intelligent political judgments about the Chinese, for example, we should understand them fully, not just their present policy. To deal with the Chinese without understanding the impact of their cultural heritage is to cut off our view."

Solmissen, a lawyer and former Life magazine photographer who joined the State Department as a foreign service officer in 1961, has probably had more day-to-day dealings with such shows than any government official. A hardworking Mr. Fixit, attached to an outpost of State called the Office of International Arts Affairs, he creates his relatively new post of Advisor on the Arts as he goes along, and by all accounts is doing a creditable job.

So far, he has helped to expedite

FOR COLORED GIRLS IS A TRIUMPH. IT'S RECOMMENDED AND IT'S BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE SAME PEOPLE WHO GAVE BROADWAY A CHORUS LINE; JOE PAPP AND HIS NEW YORK SHAKESPEARE FESTIVAL.

Colored Girls" is a play that should be seen, savored and treasured.

By CLIVE BARNES
The evening is composed of poems and stories that go deeply, profoundly and lovingly into what it is like to be black and not beautiful. Of course Miss Shange writes with such exquisite care and beauty that anyone can relate to her message. Fundamentally—if we have any sensitivity or sensibility at all—we all feel the same things. We just need poets and other strangers to point them out to us. She says, "I survive on intimacy and tomorrow," and most of us do, or more dramatically perhaps, "I will tell all of your secrets into your face." That is beautiful, pungent, accurate writing. It has leanness and accuracy to it that purges the mind.

The play as been directed by Oz Scott as if he had not had to direct it at all—which is the ultimate achievement—and the actresses are simply wonderful. Just watch the way they react to one another, smile or look away, this is ensemble playing of great quality. The actresses were Trazana Beverley, Laurie Carlos, Rise Collins, Aku Kadago, Janet League, Paula Moss, and Miss Shange. Mr. Papp last year gave us "A Chorus Line," for which we are grateful. But this, while it may prove caviar to the general, is much more important. It could very easily have made me feel guilty at being white and male. It didn't. It made me feel proud at being a member of the human race and with the joyous discovery that a white man can have black sisters.

By WILLIAM A. RAIDY (L.A. PRESS)
IT IS A remarkable example of forceful ensemble acting and this septet made up of Janet League, Aku Kadago, Trazana Beverley, Paula Moss, Rise Collins, Laurie Carlos and Shange collectively deserve every acting prize there is. With sorrow and laughter, roughness and sensitivity, love and malice, bitterness and charity, fantasy and reality, they make "For Colored Girls" sing. Ntozake Shange's acting... Girls' sound overwhelmingly grim. What struck me most forcibly on seeing it for the second time last night was how funny much of it is.

By Allan Wallach (NEWSDAY)
Poetry has rarely been effective on the stage, which imposes very different demands. Ntozake Shange's "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow Is Enuf" is an exception, an unusual work that fuses poetry, acting and movement with enormous emotional impact.

There was nothing... This is truth, energy and strength, theater on the highest level, musical and choreographic to its roots. And so Broadway now has an even more legitimate claim to be the theater.

Good is good, theater is theater and Shange's work is the kind the stage was created for. There is no comparing the thrust and force of its power with any kind of art in any other form. It is wise. So... is tensile and... the perfor... ful.

Trazana Beverley, a tall actress of raging emotion, details this tragedy, playing all the roles. She is one of the great actresses of our time, and she should win all sorts of prizes for this towering performance.
All attempts to classify the playwright, Ms. Shange... This remarkable writer is the new poet laureate of black womanhood. On another level, she is concerned with all people—male, female, black, and white. Humanity is her theme.

... These pieces are tremendously effective mindrums that explode outside... showering shrapnel of significance... whose children are killed... What I said about "The Belle of Amherst"—that it should be seen by the whole country—applies, perhaps more strongly, to this thrilling and poignant show.

Siamsa Is the Gaelic Word For Folk Entertainment

By DESMOND RUSHE

DUBLIN

Compared with the many world famous companies visiting the United States to celebrate the Bicentennial, Siamsa is an unknown pygmy among renowned giants. The group consists of little more than 20 performers and they are all amateurs who normally work on farms, in shops and offices. Yet in its own diminutive way Siamsa is as important as the more lustrous opera and theater companies from London, Paris and Moscow. In its mixture of innocence, simplicity, gaiety, warmth and spontaneity it certainly has an over-all charm few others can equal.

The enemy now is more dangerous because it is more insidious. Ireland is not the only victim, but it is particularly vulnerable. With the United Kingdom and Continental Europe to the east, and America to the west, Ireland is hedged in by powerful influences capable of robbing it of its distinctiveness. And except in a few areas, it has lost the greatest single identifying characteristic a people can have—their own language.

Siamsa does not seek to isolate Ireland within a green cultural curtain; its objective is to make the folk-culture heritage a living, vibrant element in the lives of those who are heirs to it. That way, the Irish will be richer themselves and will be able both to absorb everything of value from other cultures and to contribute more to the world. An individual indifferent to roots, or a country lacking a national identity, is unlikely to contribute anything to anyone.

Siamsa is concerned with roots, and its stage show blends the juices of roots enchantingly. It mixes song, music and dance with old customs, lore and usages. A house is thatched, a scythe is sharpened, butter is made in a dash churn and corn is thrashed with a flail. Old tools are used, as are old instruments, like the Irish harp, the uilleann (or elbow) pipes and the bodhran, a drum made by stretching the dried skin of a goat across a ring of ash. There is a joyous harvest dance and a sad love song. The atmosphere smells of authenticity.

The entertainment grew from a few sketches put together and performed

Offhand, no harm in that; we all al comedy plots, or think we do, and around a lot in a couple of those out-

This, of course, is not only obtuse, unfeeling, insensitive and irresponsible comment, it is, in my parish, on the very borderline of heresy. If I can find out the miscreant's name, he may burn.

Picking on Edward Everett Horton. If ever there was an uncalled-for sport, a case of wanton cruelty, a lapse of esthetic judgment, it is that. It is just possible that some of the less fortunate among you may not remember Edward Everett Horton (I don't believe it, but I must learn to adapt), a chap who seemed like a lemony mother-hen high in the pecking order but everlastingly fearful of what might be coming over his shoulder (which shoulder? right? left?

Siamsa, opening tomorrow at the Palace Theater for eight performances, is pronounced Shee-an-sah, a Gaelic word which, in rough translation, means folk entertainment. It originated in County Kerry eight years ago and from modest beginnings has grown into a national cultural movement which is as profoundly significant in the Ireland of today as the Irish literary renaissance was in the Ireland of the late 1900's. Then, the literary revival was aimed at rousing the Irish to a pride in their heritage and restoring to them a sense of national identity which centuries of subjugation had virtually destroyed. Siamsa's purpose is fundamentally the same.

The need is as great now as then, though the destructive elements are different. The literary revivalists fought an alien culture imposed by conquering colonialists; Siamsa is fighting a mass culture instituted by the electronic age.

Regional Stages Are Spawning New Plays

Arthur Miller has promised Long Wharf with his latest "The Shadow Box," and will be at the Hartford Stage with his two new ones, "The Shadow Box" and "Counting the Ways," and "Counting the Ways" by the author.

Young playwrights, Sam Beckett is the most in evidence, at Yale and at Princeton's Center, as well as two other playwrights, Papp's Public Theater, "The Tooth of Crime" in West Springfield, an interesting newcomer, Robert Crisoforo, an actor-director, whose "The Shadow Box" was the best play by the Los Angeles critics when it was produced last year. Mr. Crisoforo's new play is scheduled for the year. Mr. Crisoforo's has just opened at the interchange between theaters (Gordon Davidson, the artistic director of the Mark Taper, will direct the Long Wharf version of "The Shadow Box"), less obsessiveness about doing world premieres of new plays ("Streamers" is on tap at the Arena Stage and at the Goodman Theater in Chicago), and both more and less chance-taking. Subject matter seems more adventurous: Czechoslovakia during the last days of Dubcek in Lee Kalcheim's "The Prague Spring" at the Goodman; "cultural guilt mongers" in Christopher Durang's "A American Tragedy" (or the Vietnamization of New Jersey) at Yale; a cancer ward for "The Shadow Box"; abortion in Mark Eichen's "As to the Meaning of the Words" at the Hartman in Stamford, Conn.

'Even established playwrights, from Arthur Miller to Edward Albee, are having their work done in regional theaters.'

On the other hand, many regional theaters—almost all regional theaters—feel in need of at least one light old comedy for a change of pace, and in some cases to placate subscribers. Hartford will laugh at "The Front Page" while Stamford smiles at "Arsenic and Old Lace." West Springfield has lined up "You Can't Take It With You" and the Trinity Square Playhouse in Providence is bringing back its production of George M. Cohan's "Seven Keys to Baldpate." The Arena Stage, last season's Tony Award-winning regional theater, is taking a second look at Alan Ayckbourn's "How the Other Half Loves" and Eduardo de Filippo's "Saturday Sunday Monday," two popular comedies that were hits in London but flopped on Broadway.

While many regional theaters are going through a process of economic retrenchment, the Arena Stage has managed to expand its operation. This season it opens a full third stage, in its downstairs Old Vat Room, used last year only for workshops. The opening production of the Arena season, in the new space, will be Michel Tremblay's Canadian play, "Forever Yours, Marie-Lou." It will be followed on the two larger stages by "St. Joan," Emyln Williams's "Dylan Thomas Growing Up," "Streamers," "Watch on the Rhine" and "A Streetcar Named Desire" (in repertory), either "Catsplay" by Istvan Orkney (author of last year's "The Tot Family") or Tom Egan's "Melody of Glistening Parrot," and "The Lower Depths," directed by Liviu Ciulie.

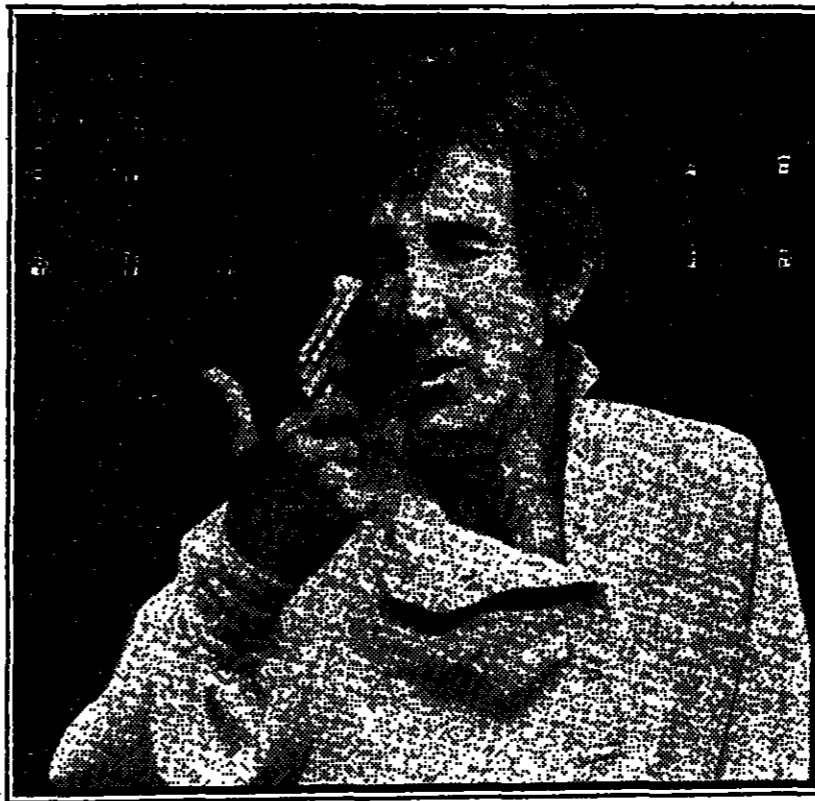

Last year Long Wharf presented the world premiere of David Rabe's "Streamers" (named Best American Play by the New York Drama Critics). This year the company has attracted Arthur Miller with "The Archbishop's Ceiling," about art and politics in an Iron Curtain country—scheduled for spring production. Arvin Brown is equally enthusiastic about his other two new plays, "The Shadow Box" and Michael Frayn's "Alphabetical Order," which was a hit last season in London. The Frayn play deals with people working in close quarters in a library of a small-town newspaper that is being taken over by a conglomerate. Later in the season Long Wharf will revive "The Autumn Garden," David Storey's "Home," "St. Joan" (possibly starring Lynn Redgrave) and "The Rose Tattoo" (starring Rita Moreno).

At the Yale Repertory Theater, Robert Brustein has a heavy line-up of new plays including Sam Shepard's "Suicide in B-flat," a mystery-vandeville about a jazz composer's collision with government operatives. The play, directed by Walt Jones, a recent Yale graduate, will have an improvised jazz score. Yale will also have plays written by two recent graduates, Mr. Durang with "A American Tragedy" and Mr. Hauptmann with "The Durango Flash," about a cowboy movie star.

Yale opens its season next week with "Julius Caesar" starring Ron Leibman and Robert Drivas, and directed by Alvin Epstein who has made something of a specialty at Yale reworking Shakespeare. Later in the season British director Ron Daniels will return to Yale to stage Chekhov's "Ivanov" (starring Mr. Epstein) and a rare revival of

Would Chekhov Accept This Anglo-Saxon 'Ivanov'?

John Wood

Wood as Ivanov—"melancholy eludes him"

By BENEDICT NIGHTINGALE

Ivanov was Chekhov's first produced play, and, partly because of an opening performance in which one actor was hopelessly drunk and most of the rest forgot their lines, it was widely misunderstood in its day. The main character, a landowner equally out of love with his wife and life, drifts into the arms of the daughter of his well-to-do neighbors, galvanizing the local gossips.

Some critics dismissed Ivanov as a mere fortune-hunter and considered Ilov—the smug and priggish doctor who spends the evening denouncing his "callousness"—the author's voice and the play's hero. Others, more subtly, saw Ivanov as an example of what fin-de-siècle Russians called the "superfluous man": a sort of pastoral Hamlet.

too sensitive to survive in a crass world.

Chekhov himself repudiated both views, declaring that if either seemed true, then the play had failed and had better not be produced at all.

Ivanov's tragedy is that he is a highly principled man, and doesn't care to see himself as a spent force, a burnt-out case, a 35-year-old somnambulist. Hence (explained Chekhov) the bewilderment, the despair, the guilt and shame which afflict him and drive him to the suicide that ends the play.

Chekhov's analysis is very complete, particular and plausible, and it would be arrogant to accuse him of having failed to fulfil his intentions. "Ivanov" is what the young doctor/playwright seemed to have wanted it to be, a clinical study of the spiritual menopause, assembled with sympathy and insight. But this comforting conclusion doesn't suddenly make the play easy for foreigners to grasp, still less produce. As Chekhov himself insisted, the extremes of frenzy and lassitude it describes are "purely Russian," alien to the French, the Germans and (as he might have added) the even-keeled English. Perhaps this explains the limitations of the Royal Shakespeare Company's performance at the Aldwych. Specifically, it may be why John Wood, who plays Ivanov, sometimes gives the impression of standing outside the character with his binoculars, watching it from a distant hillock and mimicking the mannerisms he has observed.

Wood is a fine actor, in some ways an incomparable one. Those who saw him in Tom Stoppard's "Travesties" will remember his capacity for detachment, irony, self-mockery and even self-hatred. That scrawny, ravaged face, that fretful voice and biting intelligence have often combined to suggest a man at the end of his tether with a world whose greatest absurdity is probably himself. They do just that here, too—and with all the boldness and bravura one had expected. Wood preens himself, sneers, moves from a whisper to a roar, throws up his arms, crashes to the floor, and stumbles up, giggling apologetically. But he is always more hysterical than depressive; melancholy somehow eludes him, and so, certainly, does misery. His anguish is of the head, not the stomach and heart. Indeed, the main reason he kills himself seems to be intellectual satisfaction in so logical an extension of his moral paralysis. Ivanov surely isn't that cold.

Still, John Gielgud, the last major actor to tackle the part, was accused of being monotonously despairing, so Wood is presumably a corrective, if an excessive one. David Jones's production is also in reaction, this time against the tendency of directors of Chekhov to concentrate on nuance and atmosphere, as if his plays were entirely scored for woodwind. Jones's staging is crisp, brisk and humorous, and makes not the slightest attempt to be wistfully evocative. Indeed, it is often painfully funny at the expense of the glibly bourgeois that slumps in the play's sofas and droops over its card tables.

Possibly Jones, like Wood, goes too far. Traditionalists will certainly find the evening too extrovert, too Anglo-Saxon. But then the RSC is an Anglo-Saxon company, and a good one, and the approach is calculated to bring out its strengths. With Norman Rodway, Patricia Collier, Bob Hoskins and others at their best, with Mia Farrow mullish and unsmiling as the girl who pursues Ivanov and (especially) Kenneth Cranham hoarse and mottled as the doctor who obsessively persecutes him, it seems ungrateful to complain very loudly.

ANNA KISSELGOFF

The Search For New Definitions

While ago, this department received a telegram that read simply: "Flat Event." This was indeed conceptual dance at its most conceptual.

Nonetheless, it is the old schools—and classical ballet, in particular—that are being redefined.

The avant-garde manifestations make new definitions of dance necessary.

seeking an escape in ballet's supposedly inherent romanticism. Yet, actually it is a public ignorant of the conventions and plot of 19th-century ballets.

Conversely, it is the traditional ballet audience, inured to the conventions of the 19th-century classics and dance dramas, that has the most trouble with the plotless formalist ballets of George Balanchine.

employs the same academic idiom as the classics. Confused by the use of a familiar vocabulary in different manner—one that demands that dance be appreciated for its own sake—these viewers look in vain for qualities they seek in other ballets.

In these two paradoxical reversals (the initiates miss the formal values, while the novices see only form), lies the crux of the renewed debate in dance esthetics.

The idea (which is not all that new) that classical ballet in its essence is modernist, has been expressed recently and persuasively by David M. Levin, who teaches philosophy at Northwestern University.

Dr. Levin turns to Clement Greenberg, the art critic, for a definition of modernist art: It is an art, in Levin's paraphrase, that has "suppressed all figurative tendencies" and whose esthetic "challenges the work of art to reveal . . . its defining condition as art . . . in a self-referential manner."

After discussing aspects of ballet technique that he compares to David Smith's sculpture, Dr. Levin writes: "My contention is that by means of his choreography (quite subtle but daring innovations on the classical syntax) and no less by his choices in costumes and staging, Balanchine has revealed these possibilities [of formalism] in all their lucid beauty and demonstrated on the stage of history that the modernist illusion is the essence and even perhaps the perfection of the classical ballet art."

This definition of classical ballet's inherent modernism was brilliantly presaged in 1939 by John Martin, then the dance critic of The New York Times, in his book "Introduction to the Dance."

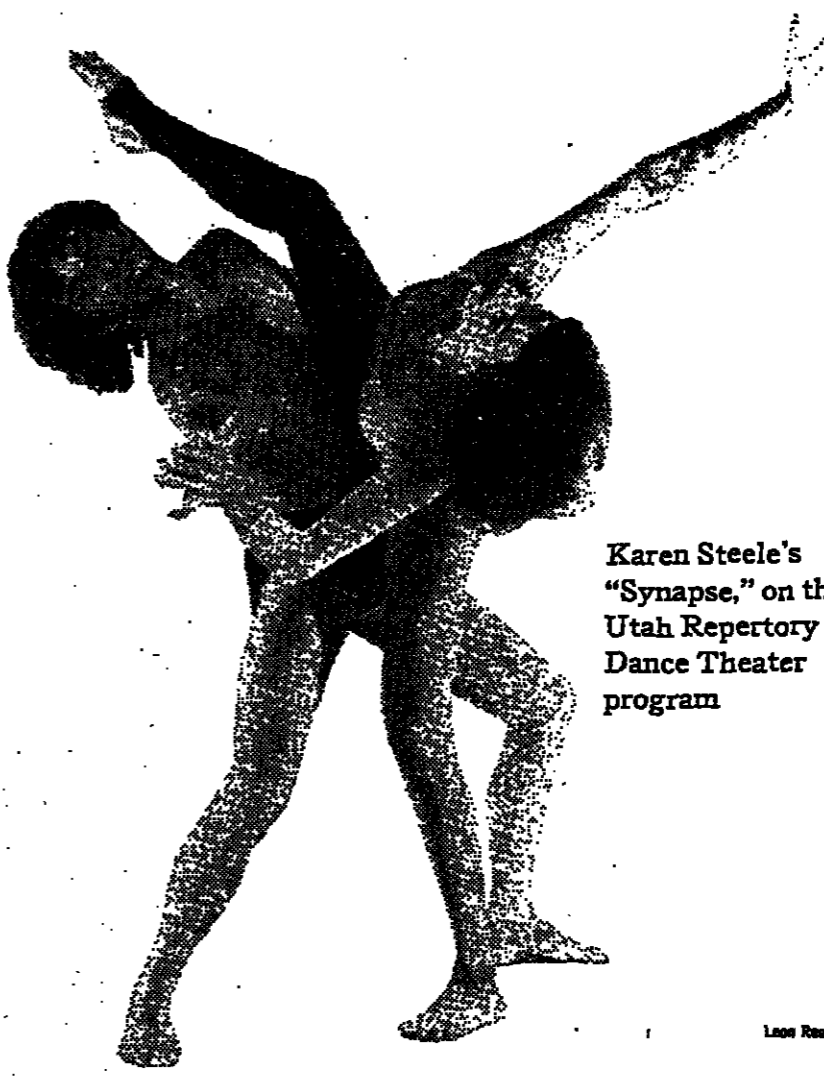

The answer to representationalism was, as Mr. Martin wrote, "The modern accent on functional form." He added, "In substance, the basis of [ballet's] classicism is its technical material. . . . The impulse of contemporary modernism, with its seeking for basic materials and their autonomous tendencies, . . . opens a new world to the classic-academic ballet insofar as its individual integrity is concerned."

The idea that classical ballet is modernist in its essence is not universally accepted. On the contrary, there is a familiar opinion that classical ballet, based on a centuries-old vocabulary, is inherently conservative.

Yet, the tradition to which classical ballet refers is found offstage, not onstage. What has been conserved is the system of training and not an esthetic that determines what the public sees.

The idea that classical ballet is either inherently modernist or conservative is a false dichotomy.

Karen Steele's "Synapse," on the Utah Repertory Dance Theater program

Notes: Controversy Sends RDT Theater-Hopping

By CAROL LAWSON

A not-so-funny thing happened to the Utah Repertory Dance Theater on its way to Manhattan.

in three years, which opens Tuesday at the Manhattan School of Music, almost fell through because of a last-minute controversy over a pas de deux with lesbian overtones in one of the works on the program.

The troupe was originally booked at Marymount Manhattan College. About two weeks ago, however, the college demanded that RDT drop the program "Lost and Old Rivers" work choreographed by Lynn Miller, a dancer in the company.

"I think the college was how it thought other people act to this being presented on stage," says Bruce Dees, general manager, adding that the controversial pas de deux "is very everyone in the audience think it's two lesbians."

Miss Wimmer tried to get the college by offering to eliminate the controversial aspect of the pas de deux—the few moments of dancing at the end. She said dancers could wear body suits but Marymount still said no work.

Marymount officials refused to discuss the incident in detail. Letta Mahoney, president of the college, issued a brief statement which said "there were details of the work we could not agree upon."

"The homosexuality was the issue, not the nudity," she says. The company's 12 members have equal voices in determining artistic and administrative policies that they would not come to without "Lost and Old Rivers" if the season had to be canceled.

"We felt that a theater which shouldn't be allowed to set policy for us," Miss Wimmer said. RDT, which is celebrating its anniversary, scoured New York for another theater and came up with the Manhattan School last week.

performances there will include by José Limón, Lar Lubovitch, McKayle and Jennifer Muller, as dances choreographed by members Karen Steele, Linda and Miss Wimmer.

Miss Wimmer, a nine-year veteran with RDT, looks at the recent with bewilderment: "I'm very that such a strange thing happened in New York, of all places."

abundantly sowed disorder and chaos? And also as model for the extension, an extension beyond all "reason" of the forms which could serve as paradigms.

Can we discern here an extra musical dimension? To be sure, it has been done and the program Mahler wrote and which he repudiated later on with many regrets, have fostered this misunderstanding. The descriptive intent by itself would be nothing new nor characteristic; quite the opposite, it would be typical of an epoch which (after Berlioz and Liszt) liked to stimulate musical perception through images—literary images mainly but also pictures borrowed from the Fine Arts, competing with painting on an inadequate field.

Mahler's extra-musical dimension transgresses these borders and penetrates the very substance of music, its organization, its structure, its capabilities. His vision and his technique have the epic dimension of the narrator: procedures as well as material ally him above all with the novelist. The word symphony functions mainly as a label.

The nomenclature of the movements: scherzo, slow movement, finale, is preserved though their number and arrangement change from one work to the other. The occasionally repeated intrusion of the vocal element at various points in the symphony, the use of stage effects by placing some instruments at a distance from the podium—all that gnaws at the limits of a clearly defined genre. Only the novelist's world possesses enough liberty to permit itself such playing with the material it uses and the manner in which it is used. Released from the visual theatre, his professional obsession, Mahler sometimes throws himself almost maniacally upon this liberty to mix all the genres. He refuses to differentiate between noble and other materials, he mixes all the basic material at his disposal in a construction which, naturally, is carefully controlled but is detached from irrelevant formal limitations. Homogeneity, hierarchy, absurd notions in his case, are disregarded;

HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Italy and France Sent Handsome Operatic Presents

So La Scala and the Paris Opéra have come and gone. It was a pity that La Scala did not take any of its productions to New York after its Kennedy Center run. Washington was luckier than New York, for Paris repeated its three productions in Washington after leaving the Metropolitan Opera. The only taste that New York got of La Scala was a performance of the Verdi Requiem in Carnegie Hall.

It was unprecedented to have two great foreign opera companies appearing simultaneously on the Eastern seaboard. And for those lucky enough to manage to see all the productions of both companies, it was a stimulating and valuable experience. Any city is apt to become musically inbred, and that goes for Paris, Berlin, Vienna or Milan as well as for New York. The musical institutions of the great metropolitan centers have their own philosophy, their own way of doing things, their own repertory. Audiences, after years of exposure to their home groups, tend to get into as much of a rut as the groups themselves.

But there are other ways of doing things, and that is what makes the contributions of foreign visitors—or any kind of visitors, of course—so important. Local audiences suddenly realize, if they had not known it before, that there are compound philosophies of production and performance. There also is the matter of local pride. How does our opera company stack up against the visitors?

Of course there are the imponderables. A visiting company is going to enter in full strength unless it is star crazy. Productions are carefully chosen and then the casts are carefully selected. As such, the productions are not necessarily representative of the day-in-day-out operation of the company in question. One says "not necessarily," because in certain cases the performances really may be typical. The Paris Opéra, for example, employs a stagions system, in which the cast and conductor remain constant during a specific run. What American audiences encountered in New York and Washington is exactly what French audiences encountered at the Palais Garnier except for certain differences involving differences in stage areas and working habits of American stagehands. (For what it is worth, officials of the Paris Opéra had nothing but praise for the Metropolitan Opera stage crew.)

There were some outstanding differences between La Scala and the Paris Opéra. The former, concentrating on Italian opera, represents a much more homogeneous group of singers. Paris, which used to be provincial, has become international, with its manager, Rolf Liebermann, picking singers from everywhere in the world. The "Figaro" of the Paris Opéra had in its cast a Belgian, a Frenchman, an American, a Welsh soprano, an Italian and a German in leading roles. For "Otello," Italy, England, France and Germany were represented. Only in "Faust" was there a preponderance of French singers, and even there two of the leading roles were given to foreigners, with Nicolai Gedda in the title role and Mirella Freni as Marguerite.

La Scala too came in with some guests. In Verdi's "Macbeth," two important roles sung by non-Italians were those of Lady Macbeth, taken by Shirley Verrett, and Banquo, sung by Nicolai Ghiurov. But the Scala "Simon Boccanegra" was Italian throughout with only one exception. Rasma Kabaivanska sang Amelia.

It is a sign of the economic times that both companies came to America with productions using unit sets. The days of massive, realistic scenery, a different set for each act, seem to be over. It also is a sign of the times that, by and large, the leading singers in each company are good-looking figures on stage and good actors, fitting intelligently into the ensemble and the dramatic framework. It was not much more than a generation ago that a besome soprano was a novelty, and everybody exclaimed over her. Fat sopranos with old-fashioned acting gestures were the norm. Today the stout lady is beginning to be a rarity. Even tenors are beginning to look manly. It used to be a rule that tenors had to be shorter than their leading ladies, and as wide around as they were tall.

Directors in Milan and Paris, if the productions given in America are to be taken as a norm, have a very free hand and take as much liberties with the libretto as their opposite numbers everywhere else these days. Giorgio Strehler, who directed productions for Paris and Milan, gave us an abstract, symbol-ridden "Macbeth" in Washington for La Scala, and a much more traditional "Figaro" for

'For those lucky enough to see all the productions of both companies, it was a stimulating and valuable experience.'

the Paris Opéra. The Paris "Otello" was highly stylized in the sets by Joseph Swoboda and in a kind of direction by Terry Hands that attempted to probe a little deeper into character relationships than the traditional kind of "Otello."

The weakness of the unit set concept was most apparent in the Paris Opéra's "Faust" which had a breathtaking setting by Max Bigness that, after a while, had little to do with the old Gounod opera. Bigness worked up something in iron and crystal that looked like one of the Universal Exposition buildings of the French Third Empire. It was brilliant, and it must have cost a fortune. But one did not see any special point in putting the medieval setting of "Faust" ahead to the year 1875. It did not cast any insights into the opera, and it caused a lot of trouble.

The second act of "Faust" is a garden scene. But with all the immovable metal structure around, it was impossible to simulate anything resembling a garden. So a coupe or tube of flowers were set on either side, and sheets were hung on a line. It was washday, and the garden was—what? A courtyard? A back yard? The trouble is that the words and music are constantly referring to a background that has nothing to do with what is actually being seen. Naturally the direction itself runs into equivalent problems. Nobody any more expects a Devil in red tights with a feather in his cap. It is an article of faith today that the Devil is an urbane, oily chap, civilized, elegant, suave, very modern, at Carnegie Hall Oct. 25, the New York Philharmonic will present a concert devoted to honours of Gustav Mahler. The distinguished music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will be assisted by conductor James Levine, the Metropolitan Opera's conductor for the occasion. The Times will be interested in Boulez's contribution in his introduction in Vienna, to be by Rizzoli Int'l. Inc.)

By PIERRE BOULEZ

What is it that attracts us about Mahler? Is it merely the sentimental, bizarre or sarcastic reflexes of a dwindling world at the turn of the century which a keenly perspicacious man knew how to catch? Is this sufficient to hold our attention and enthrall us? The reason for the fascination today surely lies in that hypnotic ability to project a vision that passionately embraces the end of an era; an era which inexorably had to wilt away so that another could be born in its place. This music describes the myth of the Phoenix almost too literally.

Beyond this vision that revolution takes place—surprisingly—with which he shatters the world of symphony. With what determination, even wildness he attacks the hierarchy of these forms which had been modified before his time but were now congealed in a strict and decorative convention. Was it the stage which drove him towards this dramatic destruction of compelling and constricting forms? Just as Wagner overthrew the artificial code of opera in order to evoke in his music drama a vastly more demiurgic process, so too Mahler revolutionizes the symphony, devastates this all too cultivated terrain, infiltrates the Holy of Holies of logic with his hallucinations. Does not Beethoven rise up here as the true model, this barbarian who in his time —in an early version of the same Daring-designed production.

Miss Meier, sitting on a metal chair in the center of the room, goes through the Ballad. Rather than sing, she "marks," using only a fraction of her vocal resource. It's a necessary precaution. Earlier in the day, she had done a runthrough of "Fledermaus," and there will be another "Holländer" session, in the evening. Is this a typical workday? "Oh, yes," she says, merrily. "We work very hard here. The rehearsal schedule is much more demanding than at the Metropolitan. That has its dangers, of course, since you can wear yourself out in rehearsal. We have to guard against that."

Nobody, however, would accuse Johanna Meier (pronounce it YO-HAN-na MY-er) of being short of energy. In her six years with City Opera, she has established herself as the complete company workhorse. Her debut role there was as the Countess in "Capriccio"; and since then she has sung in "Don Giovanni," "Cosi fan tutte," "The Marriage of Figaro," "The Magic Flute," "Ariadne auf Naxos," "Der Rosenkavalier," "The Turn of the Screw," "Tosca," "La Bohème," "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Louise" and "Tales of Hoffmann." Small wonder, then, that when an ad, earlier this year, appeared over local television touting the pleasures of City Opera, the singer chosen to represent New York City Opera was Johanna Meier, regally bearded in her Tosca feathered turban. In her wide range of repertory, her heavy identification with City Opera, her status as the company's hard working soldier-singer, her absence from the international opera circuit and recording studios, the Meier career more than vaguely recalls that former company stalwart Beverly Sills, back in her pre-superstar years.

Paradoxically, the international houses for some time have been aware of Miss Meier's talent, have made overtures, but always to no avail. La Scala has asked for her. So have Covent Garden, Rome, Florence, Glyndebourne and Edinburgh. The drawback in each case, says Miss Meier, was one of scheduling. "They simply made their offers too late. They plan months in advance; I plan years in advance." Problems in time and availability also have impeded her various dealings with the Met, though last year the red tape was unsnarled sufficiently to allow her to make an unofficial Met debut, on short notice, in the company's final two "Ariadne" performances, when Caballe suddenly dropped out.

This season she will make a more official, planned appearance, as Marguerite in four performances of "Faust." How she and the Met came to settle on this role amply illustrates the perplexities that can arise for a singer—even so seasoned a pro as Meier—in coming into a new house. "A few years back, they were interested in my doing Siegmund, opposite Nilsson. But this was before I'd ever done the role. Was I going to go on-stage at the Metropolitan and see if it fit? No way. Later, we discussed both Figaro and Meistersinger, a whole batch of performances. Unfortunately, because of my previous scheduling, I would have been available to do only one performance of the worse yet, though I'd done both with City Opera, I'd done them in English. Doing these single performances at the Met would have meant relearning them in the original language. So although I had to say to these offers, it was no fault of Meier's."

Classical Achievements on COLUMBIA

Ah, if only Gershwin were playing it... (Guess what? He is.)

Columbia Masterworks unveils an extraordinary collector's item: the only complete Jazz Band version of "Rhapsody in Blue" with the composer at the piano. The piano roll solo, recorded by Gershwin in 1925, has been ingeniously combined with a new recording of the original jazz band accompaniment. Michael Tilson Thomas conducts the Columbia Jazz Band in this unique compatible stereo/quadrasonic recording, specially recorded now only as a record of the 1970s.

She prides herself on her ability, on being part of a generation of singers with a no-nonsense approach to their work, whose attitude is of "coming down to earth and getting on with it." To a considerable extent she feels, her own professional success comes from being born into a theatrical family. Her parents are the lead actors in the Black Hills Passion Play, organized by her German-born father, back in the 30's and situated in the town of Spearfish, South Dakota, a true born-in-a-trunk tradition. Her mother, Johanna, was born while the family was on tour in Chicago; and her first appearance in the family show took place five weeks later. Considerably later, she played Salome and Mary Magdalene. "It was a marvelous school for me," she recalls, "because the teachers always came before everything else. We were a family who enjoyed our time. We went swimming, horseback riding, socializing. But always the work had precedence. It trained me very well the way I operate today."

Winter quarters for the Passion Play is Lake Wales, Florida; and it is while attending high school there that she entered and won a singing contest whose prize was a scholarship to the University of Miami Music School, completing her studies at the Manhattan School of Music in New York, where one of her teachers was the Met baritone John Brownlee.

Another source of pride lies in her made her career totally in this country—even though, after graduating from school, she had gone to Germany in search of repertory and experience. She feels her physical appearance is a liability against her. "Because I am tall and blond and large-voiced, they offered me only heavy dramatic roles, mostly in Wagnerian opera. Thank God I had sense enough not to accept it. There's a difference between a young voice and a large mature voice. Roles like Senta, at that point, would have been fatal. So I returned to my country, and learned my craft while working with smaller companies like Turnau and Goldovsky."

By the end of her apprenticeship, she was able to present herself to the Opera with a repertory of 25 operas. Today her repertory is in a state of flux. Roles like Pamina, Violetta, and the tanzas are being forsaken. She is turning onto her middle-weight roles and heading for heavier German roles. Elsa and Elisabeth are on her horizon. Someday, when she feels her voice is ready, she would love to sing Isolde.

to 90 percent capacity. We've had audience."

The Academy begins its 1974 dance series on Oct. 19 with the Pennsylvania Ballet. The series, which has five companies for $10, is a mix of ballet, modern and experimental dance. Besides the Pennsylvania Ballet, BAM's resident company, there will be Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo, in their only New York appearances this season, Trisha Brown Dance Company, Margalit and Dianne McIntyre Sounds in Motion.

The Brooklyn Academy of Music is the only place in Brooklyn looking forward to full houses for dance. Brooklyn College, which kicked off its new Artist Series/Dance last weekend, has already assembled a second series because the first one sold out in two weeks.

The college is offering its two inaugural series at bargain-basement rates—four companies for $6. The series, which began last weekend with Paschal Guzman's Downtown Ballet, also includes Joyce Trisler's Dance Company, Joffrey II and Ballet Hispanique. The second series begins Oct. 18 with the Pauline Koner Dance Concert, followed by the 2d Century Dance Company, Eliot Feld and the José Limón Dance Company.

At the Brooklyn Academy, which has from 50 to 60 percent of the dance audience comes from Brooklyn, Lichtenstein plans dance programs with an eye on the rest of the New York dance scene. "We don't try to repeat what is being done elsewhere," he says. "We like to present experimental choreographers who need exposure, such as Trisha Brown, and smaller, beat groups, rather than the more established ballet companies."

"But with the current financial squeeze—especially the cuts by the New York State Arts Council—we can't be as daring as we would like to be. We're behaving more conservatively in certain ways. We can't present companies that we would be taking a big chance on. It's really tough, especially since last season was our most successful—artistically, critically and at the box office."

Brooklyn College, whose dance subscribers are mostly borough residents, also feels the fiscal squeeze. The college is offering the companies in dance series free use of the theater for rehearsals for a week and a half in exchange for performing for reduced fees.

When We Say "Big Event" We Mean Big

You've probably seen TV announcements and publicity heralding the NBC Big Event. Now it's time for us to deliver, and we invite you to watch. Starting tonight, as we open with a double-barreled Big Event.

First, the spectacular, star-studded Earthquake, on television for the first time.

Then comes The Big Party, a super-bash where you'll meet Muhammad Ali, Lauren Bacall, Dustin Hoffman, Jack Nicholson, George C. Scott, Joanne Woodward and dozens more; be entertained by Aretha Franklin, Marvin Hamlisch, Hal Linden, Ethel Merman and the cast of "Guys and Dolls," and preview some very big new movies including King Kong, The Last Tycoon and Marathon Man.

Now how do you follow an evening like that? Well, let us name a few future Big Events:

The network television premiere of the most famous motion picture of all time, Gone With The Wind.

The Moneychangers, starring Kirk Douglas, Timothy Bottoms, Helen Hayes, Christopher Plummer, Joan Collins; and Sybil, starring Joanne Woodward and Sally Field.

World Series Game No. 2

The fall classic on a Sunday night for the first time.

Life Goes To The Movies

a panorama of the films, stars and legends of movie history, based on the popular "Life" picture book.

NBC: The First 50 Years—a 4½-hour entertainment colossal that reviews our

50 years on the scene. And Christmas Around the World

—a globe-girdling spectacle showing how the holiday is celebrated in many lands, with stars like Gene Kelly, Marcel Marceau, Liv Ullman and Dick Van Dyke.

That's a taste of what we mean by big. And although most of our Big Events are penciled in for Sunday nights, we won't be restricted to any one night any more than we'll be restricted to one source. Broadway, Hollywood, TV novels, sports—we'll tap them all.

So look for television to come alive on a huge scale this season.

Because that's the way NBC is thinking. Big.

Sam's girl friend. Though she was reportedly 14 when she made the film, she could pass for 20, while the boy playing Fat Sam looks to be about 12. When we watch Jodie sink around the stage in one of the film's best production numbers, "Tallulah," you get to wondering what this Runyon-esque doll is doing hanging out with the milkshake-and-sasparilla crowd. You suspect she has deep emotional problems, which shatters the illusion of the simple cream-puff world substituted for the real world we think we know. In the final gangland showdown, staged as a huge custard pie-and-whipped cream battle at Fat Sam's speakeasy, Mr. Parker suddenly suspends the laws that have governed the universe of "Bugsy Malone" until that minute. Everybody gets liberally plastered with splurge, but no one seems to get hurt. That's all very nice, and I really prefer a suspension in laws to seeing a screenful of Reddi-Whipped corpses, but I think that if I were still 10, I'd feel more cheated than I do now.

I admire Mr. Parker's nerve and talent, yet I hope "Bugsy Malone" is not so successful he'll be tempted to go on to do a kiddie "King Lear" or a "Seagull" for shavers. Children's Lib should be kept in its place.

Competition Makes Networks Go Rigid

In an alarming proportion of this fall season's new series make most of the returning programs...

Location of the industry clinic: As of the beginning of the new season last Sunday, only about 100 new programs (NBC's "Sop" and "The Edge of Night") were available...

And that the networks were ashamed to unveil it until the last minute. And, to make matters more curious, Fred Silverman, programming chief at ABC, announced that "Rich Man, Poor Man—Book II" (Tuesdays, 9 P.M.) would never be available for pre-screening...

Not surprisingly, the new programs are at their best—or, if you will, their least objectionable—in the area of situation comedy, a format particularly suited to the medium. Also not surprisingly, the most promising candidates for survival have been created and tailored at the factories of Norman Lear and MTM (Mary Tyler Moore) Enterprises.

In "The Nancy Walker Show" (Thursdays, ABC, 9:30 P.M.) the comedienne has left "Rhoda" and "McMillan" to portray an actor's agent in Hollywood. Miss Walker has been married for 29 years to a seaman who has been traveling most of the time. Her temporary house guest is a homosexual unemployed actor given to spelling out words: "I bet you could use a o-u-p of coffee, right?"

Immediately preceding "The Nancy Walker Show" on ABC, there is "The Tony Randall Show," an entry from MTM Enterprises. Mr. Randall plays a judge who is a widower, the father of two children and a bicycle commuter.

being police detective matched with a new robot partner, thus achieving still another variation on the tedious and silly biotic theme. It's dumb, but probably harmless. In another crowded area of TV programming, the action-adventure format, much of the material is equally dumb though not necessarily harmless.

But one of the most objectionable and ludicrous projects of the season is "Baa Baa Black Sheep" (NBC, Tuesdays, 8 P.M.), starring Robert Conrad as Major Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, a real-life World War II flying ace.

NBC also tops the violence meter in other parts of the schedule. Most notably, it has "The Quest" on Wednesdays at 10. According to one insider on the project, the first five scripts are so violent that even Columbia Pictures TV, which is producing the series with David Geffen Productions and NBC, couldn't believe the network allowed acceptance.

This season, instead of taking a small step forward, the networks, in their preoccupation with ratings, appear to have taken several leaps backward. And the ramifications are being felt at all levels.

Television

than the fear that the League might interfere with the new season's schedule in the wrong places and further jumble the ratings picture.

The networks are determined to keep a tight rein on their scheduling. There is little or no room for taking chances. Even major corporations willing to sponsor slightly more ambitious "specials" are being refused a guarantee for time on air.

Yet, network profits have never been higher, and advertising revenues are continuing to boom.

'Advertising revenues continue to boom. Why the panic?'

Advertising revenues are continuing to boom. Why the panic? Apart from natural human greed, perhaps, and the familiar drive to be No. 1, there are other reasons, mostly hidden in the complicated ledgers of corporate reports.

Nancy Walker sit-com holds promise, but NBC's "Baa Baa Black Sheep," with Robert Conrad (left) and "The Quest," with Kurt Russell, "top the violence meter."

For Phone Centenary

Today there is one telephone for every 10 persons on earth, so it is not surprising that just about every nation in the world has issued or will issue commemoratives to mark the 100th anniversary of its invention.

The United States, which alone has 145 million phones—half the world's total—was in the vanguard of the global omnibus issue with a 13-cent tribute in March to the invention of Alexander Graham Bell. Canada was even earlier with a telephone centenary stamp in 1974. Bell was a Scot who came first to Canada and then to the U.S.

Originally dismissed as just another "scientific toy," the uses to which Bell's invention have been put since 1876 would fill a book as thick as a Manhattan telephone directory, and a number of commemoratives devote themselves to the manifold facets of day-to-day communication. Other commemoratives have devoted themselves to the potential for new uses of Bell's invention with television, computer terminals and laser beams.

cities of North America and Europe already had the telephone in use. Two Portuguese stamps depict Bell's first model with a modern phone in the background and a portrait of the inventor. The extent to which the telephone has swept the world has been depicted allegorically by a se-tenant pair from Greece that has ribbons of sound emanating from a globe divided in the middle by a perforation with century-old equipment on the left stamp of the pair and the most modern phone on the right stamp. The telephone poles that are so much a part of the contemporary scene outside of the big cities, with the first telephone in the background, appear on an orange and black horizontal from Brazil, which feels close ties to Bell's invention. When Bell was exhibiting his first instrument at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition of 1876, it attracted little attention until Dom Pedro II, Emperor of Brazil, paid a visit. Bell, who knew Dom Pedro, gave him a demonstration. The ruler drooped the instrument in amazement saying, "My God, it talks." This caught the attention of those judging scientific exhibits, who had earlier paid no heed to the invention. of the proposed investment company. Applicant's choice of an investment company thus lends itself to the interpretation that applicant was influenced primarily by the fact that such companies are excluded from the coverage of the proposed legislation on foreign banks. (The Fed later apologized to Baer for intimating that it was trying to skirt the law.)

The legislation mentioned in the letter is the International Banking Act, which would wrest control of foreign banking away from the states and put it in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board. The Fed later persuaded Congress to include Article XII companies in the measure. Although the bill has been approved by the House of Representatives, the outlook for passage in the Senate this year seems doubtful.

Despite the Federal objections to Baer's application, John G. Heilmann (who had succeeded Mr. Vestner as State Banking Superintendent) awarded the charter. Since then the State Banking Department has not indicated a definite stand on the topic of Article XII.

One question people in Washington ask is: Are Article XII companies banks or not? The Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 defines a bank as an institution that accepts deposits payable upon demand and makes commercial loans. Article XII companies make commercial loans, but the "credit balances" they accept from customers have not been classified as demand deposits.

The late Representative Wright Patman was angered when he learned that the United States Treasury maintained "tax and loan" accounts in Article XII companies. These are accounts into which corporations pay their Federal taxes directly. "It is an outrage for the United States to deposit a red cent in institutions of this kind," Mr. Patman declared. "It must be that the United States thinks they are banks even if they are pretending not to be."

The debate over Article XII companies has raised the broad issue of whether the United States is able to isolate its banking and financial structure from that of the rest of the world. American-owned banks already do things overseas that they are forbidden to do at home. (Regulatory authorities realize they would be at a disadvantage if they were unable to offer services like those made available by their competitors.) If United States banks engage in such practices abroad anyway, some people might argue, why not let them do it in New York as well?

Harry Taylor, British-born senior vice president and deputy general manager of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company's international department, says: "Some of the American domestic regulations arbitrate against New York becoming a more important world financial center. For example, the Glass-Steagall Act prohibits United States banks from underwriting corporate securities—including bonds—in the United States. Well, banks such as ours can arrange Eurobond funding through an overseas affiliate for United States corporations in London, but we couldn't do that in the United States."

Much of the Federal Reserve Board's concern about Article XII companies arises, of course, from the fact that these are independent entities well out of its control. Agencies, by contrast, are not.

An agency is an integral part of its parent bank and is backed by that parent's entire capital, while the minimum capitalization for an Article XII company is only $2 million. And an Article XII company, being chartered under the State Banking Law rather than as a regular corporation, is able to sell debt securities to the public without having to register them with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In effect, the only significant regulator of Article XII companies is the New York State Banking Department.

The State Banking Department acknowledges that the powers granted Article XII companies make them relatively risky. But the department argues that Article XII companies are not banks, which receive much of their money from unsophisticated depositors, but rather are financed primarily with venture capital advanced by sophisticated investors who understand the risks. "The failure of an Article XII company would represent private loss and would not have serious public consequences," it says.

In 1971 the Federal Reserve Board reluctantly concluded that customers' "credit balances" in Article XII companies are not demand deposits and that therefore these companies are not banks. Since the credit balances are not classified as deposits, an Article XII company need not maintain reserves on them, although large commercial banks must maintain 16 1/2 percent of their demand deposits in non-earning reserves. The Article XII companies play down the importance of their credit balances. The three oldest investment companies point out that they also have New York-based deposit-taking facilities. The owners of European-American also own the European-American Bank and Trust Company, a state-chartered New York bank. The Schroder Banking Group owns the Schroder Trust Company and Banque Nationale de Paris has received permission to open a branch in New York.

No owner of an Article XII company, however, has tried to surrender Article XII status in favor of a commercial banking charter. In fact, European-American is establishing a New York holding company that would own both the bank and the Article XII company. Harry Ekblom, European-American's chairman, explains that it is advantageous for marketing reasons to be able to present the bank and the banking corporation as a unified entity.

The old-line Article XII companies are strongly opposed to more being chartered. They argue that their image could be tarnished if new Article XII companies ran a riskier type of business. It appears fairly certain that if the New York State Banking Department decides to resume chartering Article XII companies, many foreign banks would apply. It has already received a number of inquiries.

Possibly the most sensible way to invest in Tax-Free Municipals.

As an investment, The Fidelity Municipal Bond Fund simply makes good sense. Beyond the obvious advantage of income exempt from Federal Income Tax, The Fund offers significant benefits not previously found in similar investments.

No sales charge or redemption fee.
Fidelity Municipal Bond Fund is the first continuously managed, open-end municipal bond fund without any sales charge or redemption fee.

Avoiding such costs can represent substantial savings (up to 4-3/4% of the amount you invest when compared with municipal bond investments that include a sales charge). All of your investment dollars work from the outset to obtain as high a level of tax-free income as is consistent with preservation of capital.

Daily tax-free income.

Income is credited to your account daily. Should you wish current income, you may elect to receive your earnings in cash on a monthly basis.

Tax-free compounding.

Those seeking to build the value of their investment may choose our free monthly re-investment privilege. This attractive option results in an automatic compounding of earnings tax-free.

Daily liquidity.

The Fund will redeem shares, free of charge, at net asset value whenever you desire. This feature protects you from the uncertainties of supply and demand in secondary markets. It provides an important degree of investment flexibility.

Diversification of investment dollars.

Through our carefully chosen portfolio of municipal bonds, the potential risk of any single investment is greatly reduced. Our initial investment requirement of $5,000 provides the same diversification otherwise available only to those making a direct investment of several hundred thousand dollars.

Full-time investment management.

The Fund is under continuous management, another key benefit. Our supervision, both in the purchase and continuing review of the Fund's portfolio, is designed to preserve capital and help increase your rate of income.

Note: As our portfolio will change to reflect changing market conditions and new investment opportunities, we do not advertise fixed rates of return.

We suggest you learn more soon and invite your inquiry by mail. Better yet, call now. Our knowledgeable staff will gladly assist you and answer any questions.

notes American com-

Road construction in Saudi Arabia. That nation plans spending $144 billion on development projects. Nearly 400 employees of the United States Army Corps of Engineers are supervising various Saudi Arabian building projects.

panies already are familiar with the Corps's systems and regulations. "It is much more comfortable for them than working with a foreign government's rules and regulations."

"As a company which has not been in the international field for many years we look on the Corps as a good way for us to begin work under reasonably known conditions in a country with a tremendous construction program ahead of them," says Peter Foster, vice president of Bohm Brothers, an Alabama-based contractor that recently won a $120 million job to provide family housing for military personnel. "The pluses far outweigh any minuses."

"This is a unique situation. The Saudi Arabian government has so much money to spend that they have pretty much soaked up most of the personnel of the private industry project managers such as Ralph M. Parsons Company, Fluor Corporation, and Bechtel Corporation. So they hired the Corps which has know-how as good or better than private industry. Basically, we don't look at working for the Corps in Saudi Arabia as any different from working there for a Fluor or Bechtel," says Frank Reynolds, president of Santa Fe Engineering and Construction Company of southern California which recently won a $161 million contract to build port facilities at Ras al Mish'ad.

The two main drawbacks of dealing with the Corps, says one contractor, are that it moves far more slowly than many private firms and that it insists on fixed price rather than cost-plus bids. "These jobs are getting big, up in the range of $200 million, $300 million, and even $500 million," says this contractor. "If you underestimate your costs on a $500 million job by only 5 percent that can mean a $25 million outlay which very few companies could absorb."

So far about 55 percent of the contracts awarded by the Corps have gone to American companies. Col. Williamson says "There is no policy preference given to United States firms," adding "it is strictly a competition based upon the qualification of each contractor and the proposals they submit."

In early 1975 the Corps did come under heavy attack. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith charged that the Corps was complying with Saudi restrictions against Jews. The Corps then, and still vigorously denies the charge. Since then, however, according to the Anti-Defamation League, the American and Saudi governments have worked out an agreement which prohibits discrimination on Corps of Engineers or any other government to government contracts.

The environmental roadblocks to grand building projects may help explain the Corps efforts in the Mideast. "You must remember that much of the Corps is essentially a civilian bureaucracy with military trappings whose first instinct is survival," says Bruce M. Hanson, associate professor at the University of Illinois and a director of the Coalition on American Rivers, an environmental organization. "Since they are being run out of this country and there are no more rivers and creeks for them to dam up, it doesn't surprise me at all that they are delighted to get work in Saudi Arabia."

The Army Corps of Engineers is not the only Government agency contracting its services to the Saudis. Earlier this year in a deal put together by the Treasury Department, the General Services Administration was paid by the Saudis to help them purchase $41 million of electrical equipment from American manufacturers. Other Government agencies being paid by the Saudis include the Treasury Department, which is contracting with American Companies to prepare a comprehensive 25-year electrification plan; the Department of Agriculture, which is studying water supply problems; the Labor Department, which is advising on manpower training; the Bureau of Census, and the National Science Foundation.

In addition late last year the Saudis, learning that the State of California was planning to lay off 2,500 highway workers, attempted to contract with the state to design and supervise the construction of a 1,000-mile highway. That deal, however, fell through in part because of Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr.'s reluctance to involve the state employees with a foreign government program.

Except for technical assistance field teams in Iran which operate under the auspices of the Defense Department, help maintain military equipment; the Corps operation in Saudi Arabia is apparently the largest case of United States Government employees being contracted to another nation. Says one Government official: "I imagine that you might have to go back to the days of the British Empire to find arrangements that parallel these."

Why the Holt Advisory believes...

Gold Prices Must Soar Again

And recommends selected gold issues to buy now.

After having soared over 450% in just five years, gold prices began retreating in early 1975. The subsequent correction, which saw the free-market price giving up a little over half of its preceding gain, has been accentuated by this single development: The International Monetary Fund decided to sell some of its gold.

"A Gold Resurrection"

But the market has apparently discounted only the negative part of the new IMF policy. The Jamaica agreement that paved the way for the official auctions also permitted central banks to buy gold in the open market for the first time in modern history. And many have already started to do so.

Central banks that are interested in buying gold no doubt want to get it at the lowest cost possible. They have no incentives to rush into the market. But, at the recent gold price, these banks alone have enough resources to absorb all the IMF offerings many times over. Before long, we submit, this lopsided supply-and-demand situation will be reflected in the marketplace.

Meanwhile, the gold price has apparently bottomed out in recent weeks. In our opinion, the correction phase has ended and a brand new upward drive is just ahead.

In a special report titled "A Gold Resurrection", The Holt Investment Advisory discusses in some detail the implications of the IMF auctions, potential central bank demand, the widening currency gap, and the renewed U.S. trade deficit. Its conclusion: The price of gold must advance sharply from this point forward.

If you are interested in gold—coin, bullion or securities—we believe you will want to read and reread this eye-opening analysis, which also includes a list of precious metals securities attractive for purchase now. AN ADDRESS FROM THE GOVERNMENT OF ECUADOR TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES

In order to assure a complete understanding and continued goodwill between the people of the United States and the people of Ecuador, the Government of Ecuador wishes to address itself to public statements made recently by Ecuadorian Gulf Oil Company (a subsidiary of Gulf Oil Corporation) regarding its operations in Ecuador.

Ecuadorian Gulf Oil Company has been operating in Ecuador since 1964, in partnership with Texaco Petroleum Company. While Texaco carries out the operations in the oil fields, Gulf is in charge of marketing the 37.5 percent of the oil allotted to it as a member of the partnership. Development of Ecuador's oil resources was initiated in August of 1972. In 1974, Corporacion Estatal Petrolera Ecuatoriana (CEPE) joined the Texaco-Gulf partnership, after having arranged to acquire 25 percent of the partnership's assets.

Since mid-1974 there have arisen increasingly grave problems between the Government and Ecuadorian Gulf, stemming mainly from the fact that the programs for investment, maintenance, and development submitted by the companies have been inadequate for developing Ecuador's production of petroleum. Those programs, moreover, are not even being fulfilled. These circumstances have brought about a growing deterioration of relations between the Government of Ecuador and Gulf, with the latter's actions precluding adequate lasting arrangements.

As a matter of fact, in violation of the law pertaining to hydrocarbons, on June 21 of this year Ecuadorian Gulf Oil advised the Government of Ecuador orally of its unilateral decision of placing in a special account the amount collected by it on the score of whatever exports of petroleum were made from the month of February on. This amount granted under a special concession solely to Gulf, was to be paid within a period of one hundred twenty days without any interest being charged thereon.

Gulf is making it a condition for turning over the above mentioned amount, which is the rightful property of the Government of Ecuador, that the problems currently pending be settled in a manner satisfactory to its own interests. This, as can be imagined, caused serious difficulties for Ecuador's economy, which has limited resources for the country's trade and for the services it requires, as well as for the fiscal economy of Ecuador whose main source of income is the country's petroleum exports.

If Gulf were to continue withholding arbitrarily and illegally those amounts until the end of this year, it will have accumulated in the above mentioned account a total of approximately 65 million dollars. As of now the amount withheld comes to approximately 50 million dollars.

Furthermore, Gulf has initiated judicial action in the United States in order to prevent payment from being made on the U.S. market for the petroleum representing therein the share of Ecuador's official petroleum enterprise (CEPE), thereby causing it harm and disturbing in unwarranted fashion the normal development of trade between Ecuador and the United States.

By such unilateral actions, Gulf has placed itself within those cases of violations provided for in Ecuador's law pertaining to hydrocarbons, which are punishable declaring the contract void. In fact, that law establishes that the Minister for Natural and Energy Resources may declare contracts null if the contracting party thereto fails to pay the amounts due, as the State's share set forth in the law or in the contract itself, or if the contracting party fails to fulfill any of its other obligations.

In keeping with the law and after a reasonable period of time during which the Government of Ecuador has endeavored to have Gulf comply with said obligations, the Minister for Natural and Energy Resources notified Gulf by a letter dated August 31 that it should either fulfill those obligations which it has ignored or clear itself of the charges within a thirty-day period expiring on October 1. Non-compliance of the terms of such notice within the stipulated period makes the above mentioned legal provisions regarding the voiding of contracts enforceable.

On the other hand, by means of letters dated August 31 and September 18, 1976, Ecuadorian Gulf Oil Company proposes that it cede or transfer to the Government its share in the partnership, at whatever price and terms might be arranged by the parties.

In its above mentioned letters Gulf explains that its proposal is owing to the fact that, it alleges, its relations with the Government "have been seriously affected" and to the prospect that Gulf's continued-sharing in the partnership become financially inconvenient.

The Ecuadorian Government has stated its willingness to negotiate with Gulf its systematic and orderly withdrawal adhering to a schedule. Notwithstanding, an essential prior requirement for those negotiations is that Gulf fulfill those pending obligations within that period, keeping within the provisions of the law as set forth by the Minister of Natural and Energy Resources in his communication dated August 31.

Moreover, the Government of Ecuador has expressed a constant and effective willingness to solve the questions which Gulf has submitted. This, Ecuador will do under the terms of the existing contract and the law and with the fullest spirit of objectivity, cooperation, and justice.

Thus, the Government undertook a revision of income taxes, profit sharing and other items, amounts which Gulf had questioned. The figures arrived at in that revision proved different and were well below the ones Gulf had expected. Since the company refused to accept the figures of the revision, the Government has undertaken a further revision and, moreover, has stated its willingness to abide by whatever figures develop in this second revision, regardless of how it may differ from the first revision.

Despite the fact that Gulf alleges that the Government forces it to take care of domestic consumption by supplying petroleum in excess of demand and at a price that entails a loss, it has been proved that said supplies are in keeping with the actual needs of the domestic market in Ecuador. The Government must make sure that such needs are given priority. In addition the established price of US$1.48 per barrel clearly surpasses by US$.60 the cost of production. The taxes that would be levied on this petroleum are passed on to the petroleum that is exported, whereby the Government assures a more than reasonable profit for Gulf in supplying the Ecuadorian market.

The purchase by "CEPE" of 25 percent of the assets of the Texaco-Gulf partnership was made upon the basis of the net investment according to the book value of the Texaco-Gulf partnership, which had to be confirmed by an auditing firm expressly hired to that end. By common agreement with Gulf, the services of Peat, Marwick, and Mitchell, a U.S. firm, were engaged for that purpose. The corresponding report is now being studied by the Government of Ecuador, in order to determine whether there remains any balance outstanding as a result of this transaction. The Government of Ecuador has already made a cash payment of 42 million dollars which, in any event, is more than 90 percent of the amount of the transaction.

The facts stated above reveal that, in so far as the problem submitted by Gulf is concerned, there has been no intention on the part of the Government of Ecuador to unilaterally deprive that company of what rightfully belongs to it. What Ecuador, as a sovereign nation, has demanded and shall always insist upon is compliance with, and respect for its laws and for its sovereignty, and it will enforce the penalties provided by those laws to anyone who violates them.

Although, Gulf has persistently failed to fulfill its obligations in Ecuador and has seriously harmed the country, it is fortunately an exception and in marked contrast with the conduct of other U.S. firms in Ecuador. These other U.S. firms carry on thriving business activities that are highly attractive for investors, amid a climate of faithful compliance of contracts and due respect for the laws and for the authorities. Meanwhile they contribute to Ecuador's progress and to strengthening its friendship and warm feelings for the people of the United States, its technicians and its businessmen.

The Government of Ecuador reiterates on this occasion its firm resolve to maintain the most ample and favorable treatment for foreign investments which, respecting the laws of Ecuador, will contribute to our country's development through proper use of its natural resources.

International financial circles Ecuador enjoys a position of prestige as a result of its fulfillment of its obligations in an earnest and prompt manner, and it conducts its economy in such a way as to preserve its financial stability which is an essential requirement for orderly and stable development.

Hidden Treasure in Junk Bonds

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

In May 1974, a scant month after the Consolidated Edison Company omitted its quarterly dividend on common stock, the lights appeared to dim for the various bond issues of the New York-based utility.

Some bondholders panicked and prices plummeted. But to David Braver, whose philosophy is that "bad news can create a buying opportunity temporarily," it represented a situation where the potential rewards far outweighed the risks.

"I'm a gut player, and I knew Con Ed would not go bankrupt," recalls the executive vice president of Merwin & Company. "No entity could take its place."

In the same period, top-rated telephone utility bonds have moved from 10 percent yields to 8 percent yields— a 20 percent price appreciation that pales by comparison with junk-bond success stories. The Jones & Laughlin 6 1/2 percent debentures of 1964 have tripled from a low two years ago of 21—when they yielded an astronomical 32.1 percent—to their recent price of 64 1/2, which represents a return of 10.50 percent.

Typically, high-yield bonds are either straight debentures or convertible debentures. Moreover, they are listed on either the New York Stock Exchange or the American Stock Exchange.

Speaking is Michael Milken, a vice president who manages the high-yield and convertible-bond department at Drexel Burnham & Company. "We're like wholesalers," he explains. "We're market makers. This year we may be dealing in 1,500 different bonds representing several hundred companies."

WASHINGTON REPORT

George Shultz Was the Man of the Hour

by EDWIN L. DALE Jr.

WASHINGTON—There are not many men who have been honored, in ways, by George Meany, A. Nixon and Valery Giscard d'Estaing, in a quiet ceremony at the Ambassador's residence in Paris on Oct. 10. George P. Shultz got himself on both cheeks and received the French decoration, the Legion of Honor. It was awarded by the president now headed by Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, formerly Mr. Shultz's adversary in international negotiations. Mr. Meany was the one who, leaning on Mr. Nixon, was not there, but who gave Mr. Shultz, as Secretary of the Treasury, overriding authority over both domestic and international affairs.

George P. Shultz

There was no point in further negotiations at Nairobi. Instead, a meeting of the Committee of 20 was scheduled for Rome in January. Then, a few weeks after the Nairobi meeting, the world was hit by an economic bombshell: The world price of oil was quadrupled by the Arab and other oil-producing countries in a matter of three months, partly as a consequence of the renewed Arab-Israeli war. As the 20 finance ministers representing rich and poor countries convened in January in Rome, everyone was in a state of shock. How was the oil to be paid for? What would happen to the balance of payments of the non-oil-producing countries? What would be the financial consequences of this extraordinary event?

At that moment of confusion, it is now known, George P. Shultz took the lead and won the agreement of the other finance ministers on a decision that has had profound consequences ever since. Mr. Shultz told them essentially three things: First, the oil shock provided the clinching reason to abandon, for the indefinite future, any effort to return to fixed currency-exchange rates. The committee could pursue fringe issues of monetary reform, such as how to value the IMF's Special Drawing Rights, but exchange rates would have to continue to float to reflect in the markets the different impact of the new situation on different countries. Second, the financial impact of the oil price explosion would not be as bad, at least for the industrial countries, as many feared. The oil-producing countries would have no alternative but to deposit or invest their new wealth back in the banking system or financial markets of the industrial countries from which most of their new income was to come. The money, or most of it, would inevitably be recycled, though not in exact proportion to each country's oil payments. Third, and most important, practically every oil-importing country was bound to have a balance-of-payments deficit as a counterpart of the huge surpluses of the oil-exporting countries. In this situation, Mr. Shultz argued, the right policy would be simply to accept the payments deficits because to attempt to eliminate them—through currency devaluation, exchange controls or import restrictions—would have to be at the expense of other oil-importing countries. The finance ministers listened, and at the end of the meeting they accepted the Shultz position. They issued a communiqué, saying they "recognized that the current account surpluses of oil-producing countries would be very greatly increased and that many other countries—both developed and developing—would have to face large current-account deficits. In these difficult circumstances, the Committee agreed that, in managing their international payments, countries must not adopt policies which would merely aggravate the problems of other countries. Accordingly, they stressed the importance of avoiding competitive depreciation [of exchange rates] and the escalation of restrictions on trade and payments."

was sorely tempted to resort to import controls (largely for job-preserving rather than balance-of-payments reasons). Mr. Shultz showed the good faith of the United States 10 days after the meeting by abolishing all controls over export of capital-bank lending restraints, limits on direct corporate investment abroad and the "interest equalization" tax on Americans' buying of foreign securities. This was clear evidence that the United States was perfectly willing to accept a payments deficit. Four months after the Rome meeting the industrial countries, acting through the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, reinforced the Rome communiqué of the Committee of 20 by adopting a pledge not to use import restraints for balance-of-payments reasons. They renewed the pledge in 1975 and 1976 and, with only a few minor exceptions, abided by it. Mr. Shultz's successor as Secretary of the Treasury, William E. Simon, looked back on the experience in a speech last week. "Our trading system has recently undergone—and survived—a massive ordeal by fire," Mr. Simon said. "In the wake of the most serious economic problems in 40 years—inflation, recession, the energy crisis and other disruptions they caused—neither we nor our trade partners resorted to potentially disastrous dog-eat-dog, beggar-thy-neighbor policies." Mr. Simon was present last week when Mr. Shultz received his Legion of Honor.

When the bottom had fallen out in January, 1974, he had the answers.

ECONOMICS OF THE TIMES

Monetary Hope at Manila

By THOMAS E. MULLANEY

WASHINGTON—While political developments in the United States, Africa and Europe have recently dominated the interest of the world and created some new tensions, the international economic picture has been sliding into the background. But in coming weeks it will be drawing the increased attention it gets every year at this time.

The occasion will be the upcoming annual meeting of the twin supranational financial agencies—the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank—to be held early next month in Manila. Many of the 3,000 Government officials, advisers, observers, guests and members of the press have already departed from here and other world capitals for the week-long session in the Philippines.

Although the meeting will be held against a mixed background of some significantly improved economic trends and many huge, lingering problems on the international scene, it will convene on a greater note of satisfaction—and hope—than prevailed before some of its most recent sessions.

Unlike the unsettled political realm, with its recent changes and potential shifts in many governments and in their policies, the world's economic order has been improving in several key aspects. And there is an air of confidence that further progress can be made from discussions among the finance officials of 129 member nations in Manila.

The traumatic economic shocks that preceded the previous three annual meetings of the international monetary-lending-development institutions are still reverberating throughout the world's economic system, of course. However, the many major steps taken to mitigate them—both on a national basis and cooperatively through the I. M. F.—have borne some highly significant results.

The upcoming meeting is thus not expected to produce any major new initiatives to cope with the world's economic problems. It will, instead, address itself to assessing the progress made in implementing programs launched during the last few years and pinpointing areas that still need adjustment.

In conversations with several Government officials and international economists and bankers, the theme struck by so many was the scope of the improvement made throughout most of the world in the economic field—this year, particularly—after absorbing so many massive blows. Always appended was the cautionary word that much remains to be done.

Those points were stressed the other day by Robert V. Roosa, a partner of Brown Brothers Harriman and a former Under Secretary of the Treasury. He listed these three major current economic problems: "The rising debt of the less developed nations, the need for commodity-price stabilization and balance-of-payment methods consistent with reasonable adjustment processes among countries."

William E. Simon, the United States Secretary of the Treasury, who will deliver a major address at the Manila meeting on Oct. 5, fingered the sixth draft of his talk during a meeting at his office this past week, as he assessed the international economic situation in this fashion:

"We are beginning to see a light at the end of the tunnel insofar as the worst of the crisis is over, but that doesn't mean we can relax. Even if the severe inflation in many countries is subsiding and expansion is under way in many places, there are still big problems confronting every one—inflation, trade barriers, unemployment, payments and so forth. Big problems still exist, not as severe as they were, but they remain and we must produce solutions as we did during the periods of real crisis."

The major problems that confronted the non-Communist world at the recent past grew largely out of overstimulative monetary and fiscal policies that produced an unsustainable global boom in the early years of this decade, the fivefold increase in oil prices and the oil embargo in 1973 and the effects that flowed from both of them—severe inflation, recession, high unemployment, trade contraction and heavy debt in many industrialized and less developed countries alike.

The crisis that produced those problems also welded the nations into a closer bond of economic cooperation, harmonization of policies, financial assistance and other steps to minimize the impact of the traumatic events.

"The crisis," Mr. Simon said, "did operate as a catalyst to help us get things done that had to be done. Unfortunately, it took a crisis to do many of those things, but that was the case."

The major accomplishment of the industrialized world—and even some of the developing lands—was the reduction of soaring inflation rates. The progress made in that area was illustrated in a recent study by Citibank showing that the erosion of purchasing power in most industrialized countries had dropped this year—with the median rate for 25 countries down from 11.9 percent in 1975 to 9.9 percent most recently.

Many reasons account for the improvement on the inflation front—reduced demand for goods, moderation in wage settlements, productivity gains and declines in key commodity prices—but, as Citibank observes, the "truly indispensable element" has been the two-year slowdown in money growth in most of the 10 leading industrialized nations.

With inflation receding and many of the world's economies following the United States into an economic recovery that promises to run on the order of 6 percent for this country and the 23 other members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, world trade has been flourishing again after an actual decline in volume during 1975.

According to a recent estimate by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the volume of world trade this year might exceed $1 trillion, up about 10 percent from the level of last year.

Commenting on those figures, the latest issue of the Chase Bank's International Finance, noted: "The change in prices of goods in world trade will be very modest in dollar terms—only about 3 percent, although this is partly due to the relative strength of the dollar. This is good news indeed, and a sharp contrast to the pattern recorded in recent years. Since 1970, more than three-fourths of the annual dollar growth of world trade has stemmed from inflation; prices rose an average 15 percent a year, while the increase in the volume of world trade averaged only 5 percent."

Careful demand management in the industrialized countries has kept world trade prices in check, and flexible exchange rates have helped to insulate from world trade the individual instances of rapid domestic inflation, the Chase publication notes.

Programs to assure continuation of those trends are certain to be among the topics under discussion at the Manila meeting of the I.M.F. and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (as the World Bank is formally known) as well as proposals for commodity-price stabilization, the creation of buffer commodity stocks, establishment of the International Resources Bank that the United States has advocated, a new economic order for the less developed countries and renegotiation of the heavy debt burden in those lands.

The latter point may become a crucial issue. It has been estimated that the total indebtedness of the nonoil-producing less developed countries has increased from a total of some $80 billion at the end of 1973, before the effects of the big jump in oil prices, to about $120 billion now. At the same time, the oil-producing countries have amassed a surplus of some $220 billion in that period.

The petrodollar recycling problem has been managed fairly well so far, contrary to earlier fears. But the big variation among countries of surpluses and deficits in their international payments continues to pose a perplexing problem that is bound to receive considerable attention at Manila.

Also due to be discussed is a progress report on the success so far in having the International Monetary Fund's far-reaching amendment of its Articles of Agreement ratified by the member countries. It will be a slow process. Only eight countries, with Japan the only major participant to do so, have approved the amended version so far. Many are awaiting the United States' action, expected next year.

Among other things, this historic change in the I.M.F.'s operation, only its second since its founding in 1944, will legalize floating exchange rates, provide for surveillance of exchange-rate policies in member countries, authorize a reduction of the role of gold, establish greater fund quotas to permit more lending and expand the possible uses of Special Drawing Rights.

Official actions to be taken at the upcoming meeting of the two international financial institutions may not be dramatic but the talk from the rostrum and in the private meetings of the participants is certain to set the stage for some significant monetary developments in the future. The basic task is to arrive at agreements that suit the larger countries and yet show consideration for the problems and the aspirations of the smaller nations.

A cooperative spirit continues to exist in the Western world's economic realm—even if it does not in the political sphere—and this augurs well for further global economic progress, even in the absence of deep crisis. Sometimes the advance seems to be moving at a glacial pace, but fortunately the spirit for movement continues to prevail.

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Fireworks in Wall Street

There were fireworks in Wall Street last Tuesday, when the stock market suddenly broke out of a narrow and boring trading range that had persisted since February and soared in its best single-day performance for an entire year.

Amid trading that some brokers described as "convulsive," the Dow Jones Industrial Average soared 20.28 points in that session to finish at 1,014.79, the highest closing for the blue-chip barometer in nearly four years. Volume for that day—topping 30 million shares—was the heaviest in nearly six months.

After those pyrotechnics, the market calmed down and prices came down in rather orderly fashion. For the full week, the Dow posted a gain of 14.21 points and finished at 1,009.31. Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange boomed to 126.56 million shares from the previous week's 97.11 million shares. The recent steady decline in interest rates helped to set the stage for the market's upward explosion, along with hopes for a further easing in Federal Reserve credit policy.

On Monday, two of the nation's largest banks, the Mercantile Trust Company of New York and the First National Bank of Chicago, announced quarter-point cuts in their prime lending rates to bring this basic interest charge down to 6 3/4 percent. A number of other banks followed and, Friday morning Citibank joined them.

However, by week's end, the feeling was spreading through Wall Street that the Fed would hold to a stable credit policy rather than nudging rates lower. This sentiment took hold after it was reported Thursday that the nation's basic money supply had climbed by a huge $4.5 billion in the latest week.

Bond prices, after a long summer rally also turned weaker.

Superprogrammer

When it comes to coding are you impatient and pig headed? Do you annoy people by being right all the time? When you implement new systems, do you have to rewrite surrounding codes because it is quicker to start over and do it right? Are you incapable of understanding missed deadlines and do you take over when you see projects slipping?

Maybe you are all of these things and don't annoy people much. Then again, maybe you are told that you are a management problem. Either way, if you are as good as you think you are we want you!

We're developing a packet switched network and a timeshared operating system. If you have written or rewritten (but not both) IBM and main operating systems and are under-challenged or under-rewarded we can satisfy your greedy desires.

You don't have to be obnoxious to do this job—we would rather you were "but you do have to be awful d--- good. Please write or call:

Yanks Win, Clinching Tie for Title

By PARTON KEESE
DETROIT, Sept. 25—Thinking positively, the New York Yankees had it all planned before today's game.

was the ferocity of today's opening assault on Tiger pitching, starting against Ed Glynn, a rookie left-hander, and continuing against Bill Laxton, another southpaw.

The pummeling continued in the second for New York. Roy White got his only hit, a single, and Munson followed with his 16th homer.

to third on a long foulout and scored on a passed ball. The Yankees got that run back when Chambliss led off the fifth with a double, his second hit.

The Tigers slidd didn't give up, scoring twice in the fifth on Chuck Scrivener's single and Mark Wagner's triple.

In the sixth, they knocked Alexander out of the box following a hit-batsman and a single by Bill Freenan.

Now it was 9-6, in favor of New York, and the Yankees were starting to feel they may have been counting their ice cubes too soon.

"We've got to create a winning attitude on this club," asserted Grant Jackson, the Yankee left-hander who

Phillies Win, Clinch East Division Tie

MONTREAL, Sept. 25—The Philadelphia Phillies clinched a tie for the National League East Division title today when Mike Schmidt clouted his 37th homer of the season.

Jerry Martin also singled in two runs as the Phillies, in near collapse only two weeks ago, registered their fifth victory in their last six games.

The score was tied 4-4 going into the fifth inning. Wayne Twitchell, the winning pitcher, doubled for his first hit of the season.

Gene Garber went in to get his 11th save for Philadelphia as he pitched the last three innings in relief of Twitchell, but gave up a run-scoring single to Wayne Garrett in the eighth.

Schmidt cracked a two-run homer in the first off the loser, Woodie Fryman, to give the Phillies a 2-0 lead. Schmidt doubled home another run in the third as Philadelphia rallied to tie the score 3-3 after the Expos had pushed across three runs in the second.

Greg Luzinski's sacrifice fly, scoring Martin, gave the Phillies another third-inning run and a 4-3 lead. In the third, Earl Williams doubled down the third-base line, scoring Andre Dawson to tie it 4-4.

Rutgers Tops Princeton, Columbia 38-31 Victor

Knights Win 10th Straight, 17-0

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 25—The Rutgers fans waited until the game was over this time before leveling the goal posts at Palmer Stadium in celebration of a victory over Princeton.

But after the 17-0 triumph today, the fans needed only 9 1/2 seconds to tear down the south posts and only 11 seconds to demolish the north.

Rutgers will always be overjoyed with a football victory against Princeton even though it is becoming quite accustomed to victories in general.

Princeton Leads Overall Series

As expected, the Rutgers defense was superb as Nate Toran, John Alexander, Rich Wagner, Dan Gray and Len Davis led a frontal attack on everything Princeton attempted offensively.

Princeton still dominates the statistics of this original series that began the sport of football in 1869. The Tigers have 53 victories, Rutgers 13, and there was one tie.

Then there was that tie, in 1874, which came about largely because Rutgers fans tore down the goal post before the game ended so that Princeton, scoring a late touchdown, was unable to attempt an extra-point kick that might have won the game.

Ohio State Upset, 22-21, By Missouri

By United Press International

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 25—Pete Woods, a substitute quarterback, tossed a 3-yard touchdown pass to Leo Lewis with 12 seconds left in the game and then ran for a 2-point conversion today to give Missouri a 22-21 victory over powerful Ohio State.

Woods, playing only because of an injury to the starting quarterback, Steve Pisarkiewicz, guided the Tigers to two second-half touchdowns, overcoming a three-touchdown, first-half performance by Ohio State's fullback, Pete Johnson.

While Woods accounted for the winning points, it was a 31-yard run by a senior tailback, Curtis Brown, that put the Tigers in position to win.

Brown, a 6-foot, 200-pounder, took a pitchout from Woods and raced the ball from the Ohio State 40 to the 9. Woods, on a keeper, got 6 yards to the 3, then Brown carried for 1 yard before Woods, on third-and-2, found Lewis in the far corner of the end zone.

The Tigers' first attempt at the 2-point conversion went astray when Wood's pass floated over Brown's outstretched arms. But Ohio State was called for illegal use of the hands, giving Woods a second chance.

Johnson, whose three touchdowns all came from 2 yards out, got the slow-starting Buckeyes going late in the first quarter as the 241-pound fullback almost singlehandedly moved the Buckeyes 80 yards for their first score.

Missouri, however, rebounded with a 79-yard drive of its own with Woods hitting Stewart with a 31-yard scoring pass.

Casey Stengel, Facts and Much Fiction

By H. A. DORFMAN

Casey Stengel has been dead for a year. It is harsh to say, but everyone seems to agree that that's what he is. In itself, this is a kind of enlightened thinking. After all, not every legend has been allowed to die.

Casey Stengel arrived in the Bronx to manage the Yankees simultaneously to his arrival at a Bronx high school. Neither arrival produced much fanfare, but Stengel won a pennant and World Series in his freshman year there, while I finished far off the pace of clackety-teeth lectures in mythology. Kerick, Rudens and Rhesis intrigued me less than Kerr, Rizzuto and Reese. Twenty-seven years later, Stengel and mythology have conjoined in an intrigue of coincidence.

of Santa Claus and St. Francis, the face of a clown." Stengel began his baseball career near-crazy, according to a popular story of his. As a minor league player en route to his defensive position he would often practice sliding—on the outfield grass. This apparent mental infirmity worried his manager, his teammates or the clinician in the "lunatic asylum" across the outfield fence, depending on whose story you've heard or read. Stengelians have relished and embellished similar anecdotes so as to assure his first 1918 appearance in Flatbush. The ensuing event augmented the grand distortion. Casey tipped his cap to the faithful and everything from pigeons to airplanes were to have flown out of that cap. It was a sparrow, caught by a Brooklyn pitcher, Leon Cadore, who presented it to his pal and former teammate. The bird was put to immediate use. So was the story. Stengel's managerial career gained him the most acclaim. His reputation as a magician stemmed from his Yankees' 10 pennants and seven World Series championships in 12 seasons.

ferred to truth from those early days is that the Dodgers paid him not to accept a snug laugh when emphasizing his work to manage (40 years ago, not week). Unusual? Alvin Dark (Crick Tanner, Dick Williams, Darrel Johnson, et al.) wouldn't think so. Max Carey, Stengel's predecessor, was treated similarly, down to the salary paid off—$13,000. You could look it up, as everyone likes to say that Stengel liked to say.

Tales from the successful Yankee era offer no singularly penetrating glimpse into the man. Surely, the clown became the Old Professor, who miraculously platooned the right players, played the right hunches, hunched against the faulty percentages. The players who played the most expressed appreciation by calling him a masterful juggler; the infrequent platoonees deprecated a lucky bungler.

The year after being summarily stripped of his genius by the Yankee brass, who had originally hired him to fill the role of a crowd-pleasing distraction, Stengel was hired by the original Mets players said their manager could often be found amazingly asleep in the dugout during games. Some blamed sentimentality; some credited good sense. Stengel never used a player's name, the fella now managing the Yankees recalled. He rarely used the right one, a current Mets coach clarifies. "Mythology," wrote Ambrose Bierce, "is the body of primitive peoples' beliefs concerning heroes, deities and so forth, as distinguished from the true."

"Until age 59, Charles Stengel was a 'certified buffon' with little else to commend himself."

the public that, until age 59, Charles Stengel was a "certified buffon" with little else to commend himself. "He began decrepit and grew younger," it has been written. Yet his .284 for 14 major league seasons and .333 average for three World Series are real, if little regarded, statistics—remarkable, actually, for one with such premature infirmities. In truth, the fans he made as a big league player respected the ability denied him by the many media people who mythicized him. Brooklyn fans loved him particularly. These same fans, disappointed by his trade to Pittsburgh during the winter of 1917, heckled him when he made

Yet Stengel himself understood the irony of his "transformation" after his poor managerial results in Brooklyn and Boston. Truth Is Stronger... A former major league coach, Clyde Sukeforth, recalls Stengel asking Billy Meyer, then manager of the hapless Pirates, "How come you got so dumb and I got so smart?" Needless to say, it was a rhetorical question. Still, clever rhetoricians had their way after Stengel's death, writing of his early managerial failures: "His initial triumphs were negative." Title IX Progress Little Has Changed

By CANDACE LYLE HOGAN

Once the University of Georgia didn't even have a women's golf team. Now the university supplies each of its women golfers with one golf ball, and it gives each of its male golfers as many as he needs. That about sizes up the situation on the Title IX home front. Though Chris Evert may be earning more prize money than any other tennis player in history, male or female, and Wilma Rudolph, after 15 years of obscurity, is now thudding upon the wonders of Geritol in television commercials, for the most part the women college athlete is still tying knots in her workout shoelaces. Her means toward embellished support side pot on commercialism, like men's football and basketball, but on a piece of legislation called Title IX.

Title IX of the Educational Amendments Act of 1972 prohibits sex discrimination in any activity in any school that receives (in any way, shape or form) federal funds. That applies to school sports, too.

In fact, the athletic portion of Title IX got the lion's share of attention during the four years it took the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to write it. Because Title IX means change to all and spells confusion to most, it has not been universally received with leonine warmth.

Not a Very Long Way

In a Congressional hearing on discrimination last year, it was reported that American universities spent less than 1 percent of their total athletic budgets on women's sports in 1971. Today, five years later and four years after Title IX, that figure is still not much more than 2 percent.

Last June, Women Sports randomly surveyed 55 colleges and universities to gauge how much and what kind of growth in women's athletics had occurred after the first year of the three-year compliance schedule. We were soon thwarted.

Even schools that have made the biggest strides toward equal opportunity don't want to attribute it to Title IX. And though budgets are mostly on the increase, such figures are deceptive and virtually unusable as an indicator of growth or as a basis of comparison with the men.

Actually, a comparison of types of facilities, equipment, practice schedules and jobs and salaries provides a clearer picture of the degree of sex discrimination in sports in our nation's schools.

And that is really the question: Is Title IX eliminating sex discrimination in college athletics?

It's Still a Man's World

The answer is unclear. By and large, women have more support in school sports now than they ever had, but clearly college women athletes are not being treated as well as men. Sometimes, as at Pacific Lutheran University in Tacoma, Wash., they have not been treated well at all.

Six Pacific Lutheran women qualified for the nationals in swimming and two in track this year. The university (not the athletic department) financed travel for the top two swimmers, but refused to send the other six athletes, saying they were not seeded high enough. When the four other swimmers agreed to finance their trip, the university then refused to pay to accompany the team to raise the money to pay way. The tracksters were ph their way, too. But they they were scheduled to le told by the women's ad and the track coach that go. According to the women told them that if freshmen and were "too immature" to compete. The athletes decided their school's backing, th to go. The men at Pacific qualified for their natic lowed to go.

Sports Editor's Mailbox: Faults at Forest Hills—The Nonco

To the Sports Editor: Now that the hubbub of Forest Hills has quieted down until next year, a little reflection on many areas of annoyance at the United States Open tennis matches may bring needed relief to make attendance more enjoyable, and more in keeping with the traditional decorum at Forest Hills.

First, there are too many people moving around constantly. This is a continual source of disturbance to those who come to Forest Hills for the principal reason—to watch tennis. The constant movement of people, like at the political conventions, is difficult to deal with, but something should be done. It is entirely out of hand. The only time when everybody is stationary, it seems, is when match point is reached. Even then, there are those who want to get out to avoid the rush.

Another area of annoyance is the prevalence of portable radios blaring away with the Mets or Giants games. If those people who bring them into the stadium are more interested in baseball or football, they would do the rest of the patrons a favor by staying away from the tennis matches. The loudspeaker system is often weak and most announcements are lost or wafted in the breeze at the slightest wind. There is no reason why the volume cannot be brought up. One of the most bothersome nuisances is the presence of that Good-year blimp with its motors churning loudly. Throughout the entire final matches, when quiet and concentration are of the utmost importance, that blimp came poking its nose right into the faces of the spectators. Irrespective of the revenue from such a practice, it should be barred during the semifinals and finals. It was probably the most distracting factor on the day of the finals.

blems at Forest Hills. Others are parking, high food prices, street ticket-selling for "soldout" matches and the snail-like exiting from the bleachers. ERNEST R. BARRA Yonkers, N.Y.

An Un-American Plan: Eliminate Substitutes

To the Sports Editor: Player Control ("Put the Players in Charge," Sept. 12) is one plan to make high school and college sports a more educational activity by placing the responsibility of game decisions on the captain and the players, not the coach. Alternatively, by drastically reducing or eliminating substitutions during games, a highly blasphemous suggestion in America, the same results might be achieved.

As a Fulbright exchange teacher to Harris Academy in Dundee, Scotland, in 1961-62, I was asked by the coach to take the team to play on a Saturday in early October. Reminding myself that I was a biology teacher and knew little or nothing of their sports, I declined. He replied that all the team rosters would be set on Friday afternoon and I had only to journey by train across the Tay River and board a two-decker bus for the hour ride to the rival school. Consenting, I left on Saturday with boys' first eleven and second eleven football (soccer) teams (the equivalent of our varsity and junior varsity teams), boys' first and second fifteen rugby teams, girls' first and second eleven field hockey teams and boys' first eleven field hockey team. Upon arrival, the 85 players disappeared into classrooms to change into playing shorts. Play began simultaneously for all teams, interrupted only by halftime, when a quarter of an orange was served to each player. I strolled between games sensing that something very different was happening on Scottish playing fields. The "no substitution rule" shifted game decisions from a coach and his staff to the players and their captains. Indeed, even European professional football has only recently permitted limited substitution at halftime and only for serious injuries. The coach, of course, retained all teaching responsibility during practice sessions during the week and the right to set lineups. Once the rosters were set, the coach had completed his responsibility for the week. An added benefit of this system was that each player who journeyed to the game played a full game and did not stand on the sidelines as a potential substitute. Isn't it time we tried this in American schools? ARTHUR COOLEY Science Teacher Bellport Senior High School Brookhaven, L.I.

Equal Replay Time Urged for Fielders

To the Sports Editor: Umpires, like ballplayers, are doing a job as best they can. Umpires, like ballplayers and fans, are human beings and sometimes make mistakes. If the Yankees' management wishes to point out the mistakes of umpires to the fans, I feel they should also show a replay whenever a Yankee boots a play. CHARLES BARASCH Plainfield, Vt.

Drug Testing Is Called Whipping a Dead Horse

To the Sports Editor: The recent recommendation for expansion of facilities for pre-race and post-race testing of horses at New York race tracks should be examined carefully before any final decisions are made. Initially, there were only saliva tests for winners. Then there were urinalyses and blood tests for the first three placings. Then the same tests for defeated favorites. Now the state wants a new comprehensive testing program for both thoroughbred and standardized horses, which will mean expensive laboratories, expanded payrolls, the prodigious use of tax monies and, ultimately, state control. The owners and trainers can't oppose the plan because it is they who are suspect anyway. The racing association has already been elbowed aside by OTB and by the state, which has managed to strengthen its position by asserting that more and more horses are being drugged each year. Thus, there is so one to explain to the public that much of the additional "drugging" for which the tests are intended, consists of using phenylbutazone, which is routinely given to humans for arthritic conditions, and furosemide, a widely used diuretic.

So withholding these medications (which are permitted in other racing states), or testing for them at inordinate expense, does not help the horse—or anyone else, for that matter. If we really want to help the animal and obviate a good part of his need for painkillers, we ought to stop the practice of whipping him. The good ones don't need it. They run on their courage, so it would be equal for all. Despite the post-race twaddle from the jockeys who "just tapped the horse to keep his mind on his work" or the pious pronouncements of the trainers: that the boy "just used the whip to shake the horse up," whipping is a cruelty that does not belong in the world of sport. The sooner we eliminate it, the better it will be for the horse, for racing and for society. CHARLES J. HACKETT Point Lookout, L.I.

All those closed-circuit tickets to sell, the 34-year-old champion stepping up his promotional pace.

"I want a mike in the ring when we fight," he bellowed at Norton yesterday before the two men left their camps in the Catskills. "I want you to talk. We'll fight and we'll talk, and I'll win."

Ali kept right on chewing gum, interrupting the rhythm only to manage a straight man's smile. It wasn't until later, had gone, that the 31-year-old challenger grew bolder about Ali.

"Every time he takes a breath," said the man who broke Ali's years ago, "I'm going to put a fist in his face."

That said a publicity man who may have written the "Ken's really working up a hatred for this guy. It's a vendetta—a personal vendetta? Hatred? Even animosity? Hardly. As a person regards Ali as an opponent to be destroyed. On a personal level, there is only respect and gratitude.

The challenger has said repeatedly, "If it wasn't for me, I wouldn't be getting a guarantee for a million bucks. I'm a man."

Ali spent a weekend in the hospital early last July having his legs checked after a match in Tokyo with a Japanese boxer. Norton visited him. The challenger, a Leo, brought flowers and a teddy bear.

"Ali said to me, 'what am I gonna call you?' or 'Drum?' I gotta psyche you out."

is the promotional magic of the man whose stand against a Vietnam made him the White Liberal Hope, the man who has been a symbol for blacks—the Black Prince who won even lost. Baseball teams in search of pennants have "magic" with Ali, every bout is a "magic number."

Slayton. "It enlightened him, let him know how hard he'd have to train for Ali."

The Ali followers don't see it that way. They point out that Norton was stopped in the second round of his 1974 title bout with George Foreman, the same Foreman knocked out by Ali later that year in Zaire, Africa. And they note that Ali's jaw was broken early in his first bout with Norton, the only man besides Frazier to beat him.

They also call attention to the fact that Ali has trained much harder for Norton than he trained for many lesser opponents. Heavy training began at Show Low, Ariz., on Aug. 16, and the champion continued the pace this month at a secluded Concord Hotel golf retreat more than a mile deep in woods of Kiamesha Lake, N.Y.

"He's never been better," says Angelo Dundee, Ali's trainer. "The roadwork with Dick Gregory and Ray Norton [no relation to Ken] has helped him. The guy Norton's fighting Tuesday isn't the guy he fought before. It's the guy that knocked out Foreman and Frazier. Believe me."

Ali and the Status Addicts

Again the curtain rises, revealing Ali. And he stands, as they cheer him, glistening in the light of their admiration.

The status addicts, paying up to $300 each to breathe deeply his sweat. Pimps and politicians, who are closer than they admit. Expensive women and the men

Sports who have known them. Some have come from Paris on a junket that includes dinner and dancing at Reginald's, a Park Avenue disco where the fashionable discuss the islands and the price of art. Some have come from the streets, where power grows from guns and the strong wear velvet.

They have come because wherever Ali is, they must be.

He is outrageous, compelling and important—everything they think they see in their mirrors.

They have come because Tuesday night, in Yankee Stadium, Ali fights Ken Norton, an actor who has played slaves in "Mandingo" and "Drum," films of no importance and much brutality. They have come to see Ali bang this drum slowly, raising high the roofbeams of his own magnificence. They have come believing that whatever Ali does, it will be exciting and meaningful.

"I am a wise man," Ali has said. "I speak of wise things."

Finding little else to believe in, they believe that. They do not look for substance; they demand flash. In words that either rhyme or sound deep.

Ali is their leader because he has learned the two great lessons for transcending limited space—he appeals to the assembled press, which spread his words, and he keeps on winning. He is not at all like Evel Knievel, who is a circus act, or Joe Louis, who is a pitchman on television. Ali is in the business of selling Ali, and he has done so without peer in contemporary pop culture.

While it is of little consequence to the 500 million people in India whether Philadelphia or Pittsburgh wins the Eastern Division title in the National League, there are black men in Ghana, yellow men in Singapore and white men in Sweden who care about Ali. He does not so much tower above sport, as he stands apart from it. A man of true celebrity, having galvanized entire nations.

They Clamor for His Words

He has enlisted some of our brightest and best journalists to his camp, where he charms, antagonizes and influences them. They write about him eagerly, knowing there is an audience that clamors for his words, trying to display their own talents as they attempt to capture his essence in the manner one cages a leopard.

Always falling, obviously, because essence cannot be handcuffed by the written word.

But surely he must know that soon the party will be over. Soon age and the wages of celebrity will wear Ali down, as they invariably do those who weave gossamer instead of steel.

Sport is a diversion. Surely Ali, in his wisdom, must know that.

There is a passage in E. L. Doctorow's novel, "Ragtime," that speaks of Houdini, but may just as well speak of Ali: "People who did not respond to his art profoundly distressed Houdini. He had come to realize that they were invariably of the upper classes. Always they broke through the pretense of his life and made him feel foolish. . . . The wealthy knew what was important."

Muhammad Ali in Harlem in 1974

They looked on him as a child or fool."

Ali has but borrowed the secrets of power and wealth, offering as collateral his body for as long as it has strength. The time is coming for repossession. Surely, Ali must know that his converts will abandon him for the next great man of celebrity who can fill the cabaret.

It is neither sad nor funny. It just is.

All will retain an audience; but neither as massive nor as passionate as it is now. Nostalgia will be his calling card. Whether he ages in the manner of the angry Jackie Robinson or the salesman Joe DiMaggio, Ali will never be quite so able to transcend the boundaries of sport outside the ring as he does inside. It is that way with celebrities, because they touch our hearts more than our minds.

History Will Go On

We do not allow our celebrities to be men of vision, even if they could be. Just as Paul Newman can insure a crowd for Eugene McCarthy but cannot insure the votes to elect him, Ali will find himself an advance man for a cause, not the cause itself.

His skill is foremost as a fighter, compelling in his ability to punch persons' faces without letting them punch his.

He has a special grace and talent, but it is not for shaping history, which goes on without him. He has been invited to the White House and has lunched with important men, who like to have their pictures taken with him for purposes of propaganda.

But he is a celebrity and celebrities leave through the side door when the picture-taking is done.

Soon the curtain will rise no more revealing Ali. In the future they will write about him with tenderness, but will judge him ultimately as an amusement.

Because we come to see him punch someone's face.

Joe DiMaggio Still Lends a Touch of Class to American Folks

The tall, straight-backed man with silver hair had managed to penetrate only a small portion of the hotel lobby when he was besieged by a cluster of middle-aged women.

"Oh, Mr. DiMaggio, may I have your autograph?" a motherly type with thick-lens spectacles gushed. "I drink your coffee all the time."

"Thank you, ma'am," Joe DiMaggio responded politely. "Where are you ladies from?"

"Vancouver."

"That's a very nice city," DiMaggio said in a low voice.

"Please put a name on the autograph," the woman said. "Make it to Andrew."

DiMaggio blanched a bit and obliged. A moment later DiMaggio and a couple of friends were wending their way toward the coffee shop when they encountered another barrier: a cordon of conventioners wearing name tags on their coat lapels.

"Hey, Joe," barked one of the men, "my brother and I followed your career all the way. We saw every game we could. Will you sign one for my brother? He'll go out of his mind."

DiMaggio smiled graciously. "What's his name?" he asked.

"Tommy."

"Best Regards, Tommy, Joe DiMaggio"

With broad, bold strokes, Joe etched: "Best regards, Tommy, Joe DiMaggio," and returned the pad.

"You're the greatest, Clipper," the man said, giving DiMaggio a slap on the back. Then he reached up to squeeze Joe's left arm. "All muscle, you oughta still be hitting 'em, Clipper."

DiMaggio winced but said nothing. "How do you stand this all the time, Joe?" a friend asked. "People stopping you, interrupting you at dinner, banging you on the back?"

"The airports are the worst, when you have a lot of things to attend to," DiMaggio told the Associated Press. "It takes the kick out of traveling. But you can't slough anybody off. After all, you have to be glad they remember you."

An American Folk Hero

They still remember Joe DiMaggio, a quarter of a century after he took his last classic swing of the bat for the New York Yankees. He is one of the last of America's classic sports folk heroes, an impeccable, dignified contrast to the antiheroes, with their agents, presidential salaries and controversies, now populating the world of sports.

Older generations recall the rhythmic and effortless grace that made him perhaps the greatest baseball center fielder of all time and the booming bat that helped propel the Yankees to 10 American League titles and nine World Series championships between 1936 and 1951.

In living rooms around the country, housewives see him on their television screens as a pleasant and persuasive middle-aged man in a conservative business suit extolling the merits of an electric coffee-maker called Mr. Coffee.

In the New York area families also catch him on the tube, either surrounded by a flock of kids at Yankee Stadium or sitting down with an Italian family in the Bronx, talking about how nice it is to save at the Bowery—the Bowery being the Bowery Savings Bank.

"See that guy?" the man of the house is almost sure to say when a DiMaggio commercial comes on. "That's the Yankee Clipper. Never been another like him. I remember one day at the Stadium, with Bobby Feller pitching for the Indians. . . ."

"He seems like such a nice fellow," the wife remarks.

That's how, it goes; at least, so say the advertising agencies.

If DiMaggio was impressive in Yankee pinstripes—6 feet 1/2 inches, a lean 190 pounder who moved like flowing water—he is much more handsome and striking as a man approaching his 63d birthday.

He has retained his athletic figure, paying close attention to diet and exercise. He is flat-bellied, straight as a poker, less than 10 pounds over his playing weight.

Silver gray hair, which he is too proud to dye, has softened his strong Italian features. Dark eyebrows frame dark brown, expressive eyes. His face is deeply tanned, reflecting hours on the golf course, and is virtually unlined.

A Man of Fierce Loyalties

Off the screen as well as on it, he exudes a warmth and open friendliness that was foreign to him as a player. He has come to like people. He enjoys being around them.

His closest friends are not members of the jet set, the Hollywood community or the smart sports whirl. Rather, they are people he met over the years—a businessman who flies him around in a private plane, a shirt-maker, a publisher, a publicist. He has fierce loyalties.

In his playing days, DiMaggio was timid and retiring. He was known as a loner even among his teammates. He was not a party guy. He avoided controversy and fanfare. He guarded his private life studiously.

Today he is an attractive bachelor, twice wed to movie actresses in marriages that didn't work out, a restless man apparently torn between conflicting desires.

On the one hand, as a heritage from his baseball days, he has an urge to travel, see new things and meet new people. On the other, there is the temptation to pack it up and retire to a life of ease on San Francisco's Fisherman's Wharf, where he grew up as one of the nine offspring of an immigrant Italian fisherman.

"I find it always good to get home and rest," he said. "But after a while, I get edgy and am off again."

Within the last few weeks, DiMaggio's odyssey has taken him from San Francisco to New York, Boston, Las Angeles, Las Vegas, Toronto and a trio of cities in Pennsylvania—Erie, Harrisburg and Williamsport.

He attended the Little League baseball finals at Williamsport. He was the master of ceremonies at Scout-O-Rama as a favor to a banker friend. He attended a sports carnival in Toronto. He even served as celebrity host of a bocci tournament in Las Vegas and took down third prize. Most of his appearances are made in the interest of good will.

A Happy Grandfather

"I am cutting down on old-timers games," DiMaggio said. "This year, I went to the top in New York and also the Angels' game in Los Angeles. I went to Lost Angeles as a favor to my old friend, Red Patterson [Angels' president], but there was another reason, too. I got a chance to take my granddaughters to Disneyland."

Joe's granddaughters—Kathy, 14, and Paula, 12—have brought fresh enthusiasm to the ex-ballplayer's life. They are the daughters of his son, Joe Jr., by the Clipper's first wife Dorothy Arnold. Joe Jr. is a successful trucking executive in northern California.

"Kathy is going to be a fine athlete," Joe says proudly. "She is a big girl already active in swimming and track. Paula clings to her grandfather. Both like fishing. Every chance we get, we are out on our boat, the Yankee Clipper."

Home for DiMaggio is a brownstone house in the Marina section of San Francisco which he purchased for his parents nearly 40 years ago and, after their death, shared for a brief time with his second wife, the late Marilyn Monroe.

Now the house is cared for by Joe's sister, Marie, who also handles a big part of Joe's correspondence and appointments. Joe's mail is voluminous, having mushroomed with his television commercials. He doesn't have an agent or a secretary.

"Sometimes I am pretty hard to catch up with," Joe said with an amused smile. "All my mail and telephone calls go to the restaurant. I pick it up when I return to the Coast."

The restaurant is DiMaggio's Restaurant, a familiar eatery on Fisherman's Wharf, built in 1937, formerly jointly owned by Joe and brother Tom and now run by Joe's older brothers, Tom and Vincent.

It is a regular hangout for the former Yankee star when he is home. There he hobnobs with old cronies and fishermen, who refer to him as "The Clipper" and treat him as one of the home folks, not as a hero. DiMaggio likes that.

Joe's father, Giuseppe, called "Zio Pepe," immigrated from Isola delle Fenicie, an island off Palermo, and first settled in the small fishing village of Martinez, a few miles to the north of the Golden Gate Bridge.

Joe was a year old when the family moved to San Francisco. Giuseppe wanted all his sons to follow in his footsteps but instead they became fascinated with the great American pastime. Joe, Vince and Tom all had successful major league careers. Another brother, Michael, fell from a boat and drowned in 1953. Tom, the oldest, remained a fisherman and became the family breadwinner.

"Tom would have been the best ball player of all," Joe says.

When DiMaggio attends old-timers games, he usually shows up not in his familiar Yankee uniform with the big "5" on the back but in a dark suit, white shirt and tie. An exception this year was the Yankee show at which Joe agreed to don the uniform but refused to play in the two-inning game.

He talked about this recently during a moment of relaxation in Las Vegas, where he was attending the celebrity bocci tournament.

"Let's go into the bar and have a drink," a friend said.

"You know I don't drink," DiMaggio said. "I am going to the coffee shop."

Peaches and Cottage Cheese

In the coffee shop, he ordered peaches and cottage cheese.

"Is that all?" the waitress asked.

"That's all," replied DiMaggio.

"It's my ulcers," he said. "They give me fits. I haven't smoked in 10 years—I used to smoke three packs a day. I seldom drink—not that I am a prude or hypocritical, understand. I never particularly cared for it."

DiMaggio then said the reason he did not suit up and take swings at in the old-timers games was largely the same one that brought about his retirement in 1951.

"I don't want to get out there and embarrass myself," he said. "I had a lot of injuries when I played. Aches and pains that are still around. My back kills me most of the time. I had operations on both my heels for bone spurs. I have arthritis and tendonitis."

"If I took a cut at a ball it would be a swing like an old woman. I don't want people to remember me that way. Right now, I couldn't throw a baseball from here to that table over there, unless I did it underhand."

N.C.A.A. Cutbacks Raise Ire of Some Big Schools

ATLANTA, Sept. 25 (UPI)—The Collegiate Football Association exists at the moment in name only. But unless some radical changes are made, it may someday become the governing body for bigtime college athletics.

The Southeastern Conference commissioner, Boyd McWhorter, one of the founders of the C.F.A., insists its only purpose, if it becomes operational at all, will be to serve as a "lobby" group for legislation favorable to the bigger schools within the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Some of those bigger schools are currently incensed over N.C.A.A. rules limiting the size of college football teams and coaching staffs and limiting recruiting and scouting. Officials have said that if smaller N.C.A.A. members don't stop trying to cut everyone down to their size, the N.C.A.A. may be torn apart.

"I've always believed that if you give a boy a grant and he does the best he can, both as a player and as a student, then you should continue to honor that commitment."

McWhorter contends that the N.C.A.A. set the stage for the 30-95 rule when it came up with the one-year scholarships.

"I never agreed with the old rule that forced a school to keep a boy on scholarship even after he refused to participate in athletics," said McWhorter. "I always felt that anytime a boy made that decision, his grant should have been forfeited."

Coach in a 'Guessing Game'

"But now we're in a position where we need to protect the athlete rather than the school. The rule will force a coach into a guessing game. He'll be forced to cut those players he doesn't think will help him on Saturday in order to bring in others that he hopes will help."

"Coaches are under tremendous pressure to win. I can't fault them, from a pragmatic standpoint, for wanting the best 95 players they can get. But from an ethical standpoint, I dislike the steps they'll have to take to stay within that limit."

S.E.C. officials fear that high school prospects will be unwilling to sign grants with schools where they may be cut at the end of any year.

contract at any one time. Thus, over a four-year period, the schools may bring in a total of 120 players, but by one means or another must get rid of 23 of those.

Red Shirting Increases Problems

Conferences that permit "red shirting" have an even bigger problem. They must get rid of 53 of the 150 players they bring in over a five-year period.

"I can't speak for the other presidents," says the University of Georgia president, Fred Davison, "but I must disagree with any regulation which, on its very face, proposes that a school offer athletic scholarships to a certain number of young men with the intention of letting some go, no matter how hard they may try on the field, or how well they might do in the classroom."

"I've always believed that if you give a boy a grant and he does the best he can, both as a player and as a student, then you should continue to honor that commitment."

Tigers' Freehan Finds Expansion Time Trying

DETROIT, Sept. 25 (UPI)—Bill Freehan doesn't need glasses to read the writing on the wall. There's an expansion draft coming up and he could well be a part of it.

"I'm going through a very difficult time in my career," Freehan said when the subject of possible life in Toronto or Seattle was mentioned.

Times have changed for Bill Freehan. An 11-time all-star catcher and one of the spiritual leaders of the Tigers' 1968 world championship team, he is winding down his career as a part-time player on a Detroit team that some say has been worse than an expansion team at times during the past three seasons.

The adjustment of going from full-time all-star to part-time player isn't the only thing that makes this a difficult time for Freehan, who will be 35 years old before next season. The uncertainty of whom he'll be playing for—if he'll be playing—has become part of it.

"If I were management, I wouldn't protect me," Freehan said in a brutal self-assessment that must have hurt.

"There are 15 more valuable players here and in the minors who will help this club in the future far more than I will."

"There is a realization of fact," he said. "There is no emotion in there."

Freehan and the 18 other American League players who are "5-and-10" year men, which gives them a certain amount of say over where they will be in the future, were sent letters recently by Bowie Kuhn, commissioner of Major League Baseball.

The letters asked them to give their preference among five options insofar as the upcoming expansion draft is concerned. American teams must have their lists of the 15 players they want protected from those on their 40-player roster set by Oct. 25. The draft will be 10 days later, Nov. 5.

Freehan, Willie Horton and Mickey Stanley, the three Detroit players who are among the 19 "5-and-10" year men in the league, were asked their preference among the options.

Were they interested in being drafted by and playing for Seattle? Toronto? Both? Neither? Or did they want to discuss the situation, to find out how badly they were wanted or what the new club had in mind for them?

The replies are just guidelines for the two new franchisees. They can draft the "5-and-10" year men whether the players like it or not. The veterans can refuse to sign and remain with their current teams, however, and the new clubs can't draft someone else to replace them.

"Part of it depends on whether or not they want me back here or not," Freehan said. "If they don't want me back, then I don't want to come back to a place where I'm not wanted."

The greatest fielding catcher in baseball history, according to the averages, Freehan has had preliminary talks with Jim Campbell, general manager of the Tigers. Nothing has been decided.

For Campbell, the expansion draft is the "great guessing game," he can't possibly win. Detroit and every other team will lose five players (adding three to their protected list every time one of theirs is chosen), and will be criticized no matter what happens.

With three "5-and-10" players, Campbell could have an 18-player protected list instead of 15 should Freehan, Horton and Stanley decide they prefer to close out their careers in Detroit. There will be a certain amount of sounding out on both sides before final decisions are made.

"You have to make a decision on whether or not you want to be approached," said Freehan, who has already made up his mind he will listen to an offer. "I'd rather know what their deal is in advance. And I want to know what my ball club's feeling about me is."

But Freehan much prefers Detroit, even as a part-time player, than uprooting his family to play regularly for a season or three in either of the two new cities.

He had played in 66 games as Detroit's last 12 of the season, taking a .259 average with five home runs and 28 runs batted in into the last two weeks.

"I would, definitely," he says about staying with Detroit. "In whatever capacity they wanted me to play in. It's up to management whether I play base-

Best and Marsh Are Hits In British Soccer Again

LONDON, Sept. 25 (UPI)—George Best and Rodney Marsh, hired back to the British soccer scene after playing in the United States, are paying dividends for the Fulham team. And that's good news for Alec Stock, the team's manager, who put his head on the chopping block when he signed the two stars.

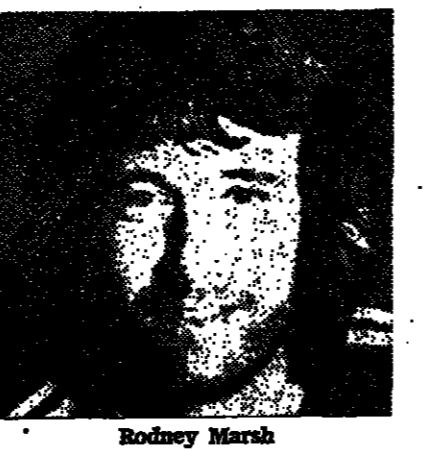

"It's suicidal. A black day for British soccer," said one sports columnist, recalling Best's past misdeeds, which included drunken brawls, disappearances on game days and stormy love affairs. These days, however, Best is turning up regularly for training, and Fulham has not lost a game since the Best-Marsh show hit the road. Furthermore, the turnstile at Fulham's stadium is clicking. The home game before Marsh and Best came on the scene drew just 9,400 spectators, but gates for the next two games more than doubled, with attendances of 21,777 and 25,700. And the interest in Fulham has spread abroad.

Wood, Field and Stream: Angler Loses Optimism

By NELSON BRYANT
Special to The New York Times

MONTAUK, L.I.—Capt. Al Urban was not bubbling with optimism as he, his wife, Mary, and I set forth for an afternoon of fishing from Montauk Harbor. Urban, a charter-boat skipper who specializes in casting, rather than trolling, for such species as bluefish and striped bass, believes that this is the worst season he can remember at Montauk for his style of angling.

"Sometimes," he said, "you can pick up striper by deep trolling with wire line, and if you want to go off shore and go deep or chum for bluefish you'll do all right, but the stripers simply aren't along the shore in any quantity at all."

A Surfeit of Baitfish

Urban has the theory that heavy off-shore fishing by foreign vessels has so reduced the numbers of predatory fish that there is a surfeit of baitfish, so much, indeed, that the blues and stripers can find all they want to eat far from the beaches.

Whatever the reason, inshore fishing for bluefish and striped bass has been unusually slow this summer and fall at Montauk and north to Cape Cod and the offshore islands.

Urban has been so discouraged by the prospects for this fall that he has canceled all his October trips. This move was, however, triggered in part by his semi-retirement. Last year, Al and Mary sold their Montauk motel of the same name and moved to Florida for the winter. They are currently building a new home at Montauk because, as Al put it, "it's hard to leave the place for good."

Feeling that there was no point in trying for bass on the south side of the island, Urban had us fishing deep with small bucktail jigs near Montauk Light. His first cast produced a 9-pound weakfish, but that was the last of that species we ever saw. Two hours more of fishing yielded half a dozen small bluefish, and as the sun went down we trolled surgical tube lures on wire line over Shagwong Reef. That effort resulted in one good strike—probably a medium-sized striper—but the fish broke free.

A 9-Pound Weakfish

Leaving Montauk the next morning I made the day-long drive to Woods Hole, Mass., to catch the ferry to Martha's Vineyard.

There was no room left on the 5:30 P.M. ferry and the next one was at 8. Remembering that I had some gear in my car that belonged to Frank Math-er 3d of nearby Quisset, I called him and he immediately suggested that we go forth in his boat in Woods Hole Harbor to cast plugs for bass and bluefish.

Bolestered by a brace of gin and tonics and a package of crackers and cheese provided us by his wife, Natalie, Math-er and I went out and within 10 minutes were raising bluefish along the edge of the Woods Hole-Buzzard's Bay Channel.

On our first seven drifts we raised at least one fish, each time and caught three, the largest about 9 pounds. By that time the returning ferry, its lights gleaming across the dark harbor, was sliding up to the dock. Two more casts produced no action. Math-er put me ashore near the ferry dock and I rushed toward my car with a bluefish in one hand and my ticket in the other.

Brown, the King of Ivy Soccer, Can Expect Challenge to Reign

By ALEX YANNIS

Cliff Stevenson, the coach at Brown, obviously didn't have Yale in mind when he predicted before the season that "the Ivy League is going to be stronger than ever before." Stevenson's statement applies more to his team, which dominated the league the last three years and reached the National Collegiate semifinals twice.

The Bruins opened defense of their three-year title by trouncing Yale, 11-1, but the road will not be as rosy the rest of the way this season. The strongest challenges will come from Penn, Harvard, Cornell and Columbia. Yes, the same Columbia that finished at the bottom last year.

Cornell actually shared the league title with the Bruins last season, but miracles don't happen every year. The departure of Dan Wood, last year's coach who is now in the pros, will have some effect. Jack Wright, Wood's replacement, started with a victory but it was against Princeton, which is expected to play a secondary role.

Penn, which will be the host of the N.C.A.A. tournament in early December, proved its strength, depth and determination by rallying from a two-goal deficit to edge Dartmouth, not an easy opponent for anyone. Bob Seddon, Penn's coach, is "optimistic," but other coaches in the league said that perhaps he should use a stronger word.

Harvard defeated Columbia, 2-1, using a reliable offensive weapon in Lyman Bullard. Bullard assisted Mike Lohler on the first goal and scored the other in Cambridge last week when the league opened its season. All teams are idle this weekend, but they return to action Friday and Saturday.

Brown and Penn attract large crowds to their games. To lessen conflicts with the football teams on Saturday morning, several games are on schedule for Friday nights. A Harvard-Penn game in a Friday night attracted over 11,000 in Franklin Field.

With no seniors and as many as seven freshmen starting last year, Columbia broke a two-year losing streak by winning three games and losing 11. Things will be different this year, as John Wood's efforts in recruiting have come long search for strikers. The Tigers, who lost their league opener, are in Old Dominion's tournament this weekend.

Like last year, when Dartmouth posted the highest number of victories in the league since 1964, the Big Green will surprise many teams. Tom Griffith, the coach, has built a good program since joining the school, and the only way the team can go is forward.

Bill Killen knew things wouldn't be as bright for Yale this season before the Brown game. The Elis had lost a 2-1 decision to Harvard, which doesn't beat many teams. When Killen talks about his team, he talks of John Taft, the captain.

The United States and Canada played to a 1-1 tie in a World Cup game in Vancouver on Friday night before a crowd of 15,453. It was a rugged game in which an American was ordered off the field and two others, including Coach Walt Chyzowych, were cautioned by the referee. Chyzowych, who refused to talk with newsmen afterward, protested the Canadian goal, saying it was offside.

British Team in Westport

A 15-goal team from the Hurlingham Polo Association in Britain will make its fourth and last United States stop at the Fairfield County Hunt club in Westport, Conn., today to play a 13-goal Fairfield team. Brookville plays Huntington at Bethpage State Park today, Bethpage meets Muttontown at Hickox Field in Old Westbury, L.I., Saturday and Westbury opposes Huntington at Bethpage State Park next Sunday. All games begin at 3 P.M.

Massone Named Coach

Mike Massone, who was graduated in June from St. Francis College in Brooklyn, has been named coach of the college's cross-country team. He was a member of the cross-country team in 1975 and 1976.

Mark Schubert, center, coach of the Mission Viejo (Calif.) Nadadores, with Brian Goodell and Shirley Babshoff, two of his swimmers. Goodell won two gold medals in the Olympics, Miss Babshoff one gold and four silver medals.

Coaches Say National Organization Part of Swim Improvement Answer

By NEIL AMDUR

In the aftermath of what one woman's coach called "The Games to Forget," concern has replaced confidence as the mood in America's competitive swim program.

Once the medal by which other countries established systems and standards, United States swimmers, particularly among the women, have drawn a wave of criticism from coaches, with even grimmer forecasts for the future unless immediate revisions are instituted.

"We want to do something, we've got to do something," said Frank Elm, an assistant coach of the United States Olympic women's team in Montreal. "Every day, every week, we waste, we're getting that far behind."

"A lot of people say the rest of the world is catching up," Peter Deland, the head coach at the University of Southern California noted, of one explanation for the American decline. "That's a poor winning philosophy. Others say it's part of a cycle, the way it went for Australia and Japan in the last fifties, but that's fatalistic. You can't go and stand on those things. You have to look in the mirror and find answers."

Top United States coaches did just that last weekend during a special panel discussion held in conjunction with the American Swimming Coaches Association's annual conference in New Orleans. Among some of the strongest concerns raised during a session that lasted almost six hours were the following:

"The United States has no system, no central swimming organization, to coordinate the development and training of gold-medal prospects. 'We have been a nation without a plan, but we've lucked out in the past,' said Deland. "The margin is gone now."

"Women's programs at the high school and college level must be upgraded to induce good swimmers to continue past traditional teenage requirements."

"Discipline has deteriorated on touring American teams in recent years with swimmers ignoring curfews, drinking excessively and treating foreign trips as rewards rather than serious training experiences. Coaches have failed to report these violations because of the fear that any unfavorable publicity may reflect on them."

"No national program has been drawn up to study the scientific or medical aspects of swimming, an area given intense scrutiny at all age levels in East Germany, now No. 1 in women's swimming."

"More indoor facilities are needed to encourage year-round participation in areas other than California and Florida. 'Montreal has four indoor 50-meter facilities,' said Elm. They're better than any facilities in our country."

"Coaches must reassess training tactics with a greater emphasis on 'dry-land' programs such as strength-building, calisthenics, and gymnastics. Fewer than 10 per cent of current training time is allotted to out-of-water activities mainly because many swim coaches have little background in these areas."

"National swim camps should be set up at three or four different sites

Mayer Upsets Vilas, 6-3, 6-4, In Coast Tennis

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 24 (AP)—Sandy Mayer of Mendham, N.J., and John Lloyd of England pulled off major upsets today in the third round of the $125,000 Pacific Southwest open tennis tournament.

Mayer defeated second-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, 6-3, 6-4, and Lloyd recorded his second straight upset by eliminating Stan Smith, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4. Lloyd had defeated eighth-seeded Roscoe Tanner yesterday; Smith was seeded ninth.

Arthur Ashe, the 1975 winner, had to go three sets before eliminating Byron Bertram of England, 6-3, 6-7, 6-2. Raul Ramirez of Mexico, seeded No. 5, defeated Billy Scanlon of Corpus Christi, Tex., 6-1, 6-3, and Dick Stockton beat Marty Riessen, 6-4, 6-1.

Aussies Tie Italians

ROME, Sept. 24 (AP)—John Alexander upset Adriano Panatta, the Italian open champion, 7-5, 6-3, 6-4, today giving Australia a 1-1 tie with Italy in the Davis Cup tennis semifinal competition. Corrado Barazzutti had gained the first point for Italy by defeating John Newcombe, 7-5, 6-1, 6-4, in the opening singles match.

Connors First In Net Points

BOSTON, Sept. 25 (UPI)—Jimmy Connors, U.S. Open champion, leads in the Commercial Union Grand Prix tennis standing. Connors, who won the Forest Hills, N.Y., event for the second time in three years, holds a 575-493 lead over Mexico's Raul Ramirez. Sweden's Bjorn Borg, U.S. Open runner-up, is third with 480 points.

In doubles, the Ramirez-Brian Gottfried team increased its lead after last week's $100,000 Grown Professional doubles championship. The team collected 32 points for defeating Australians Allan Stone and Phil Dent, 6-1, 6-4, 5-7, 7-6, in the sole doubles-only event on the Grand Prix calendar.

In individual doubles, Ramirez leads with 190 points, and Gottfried is second with 169. Fred McNeil of Chevy Chase, Md., is third with 163.

Doubles players qualify for shares of the $200,000 Grand Prix doubles bonus pool as individuals. However, the top four teams qualify for the Commercial Union Grand Masters tournament at Houston Dec. 5-12.

Rounding out the top 10 in singles are Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, 450 points; Eddie Dibbs of Florida, 445; Harold Solomon of Silver Spring, Md., 386; Manuel Orantes of Spain, 381; Wojtek Fibak of Poland, 377; Adriano Panatta of Italy, 370; and Ili Nastase of Rumania, 310.

around the country where prospects can train for six to seven weeks during the summer. The camps would be especially useful for familiarizing swimmers from smaller clubs and towns with a big-time atmosphere.

The most dramatic proof of the shift in power in the women's area was provided by Deland, who presented a series of graphs to the audience of 500 coaches. One graph showed the percentage of medals won by United States women since the 1954 Olympics: Tokyo, 62.5 percent; Mexico City, 61.9; Munich, 40.5; Montreal, 17.9. American women won only a single gold medal, the 400-freestyle relay, in Montreal.

By contrast, the United States men took 12 of the 43 first-place medals and 61 per cent of all swim medals at Montreal, an increase of almost 12 percent from Mexico City and Munich.

"But we can't just sit still with the men either," warned Mark Schubert of Mission Viejo, Calif. "There's complacency there, too, and we're not that far ahead of the Russians. They showed by far the most improved progress of anyone at Montreal. They're only a couple of a second behind us."

Schubert, who coaches the country's second largest club program with almost 500 swimmers, feels "too many swimming coaches in the United States are looking for an easier way out than hard work." He also does not believe that Americans should be content with silver, bronze or a free trip to an Olympics simply because of the intensified nationalized programs in East Germany and other eastern European nations.

George Haines, one of America's most successful coaches during the last two decades, contends that too many United States swimmers travel overseas with nothing to show for it and that trip priorities now are based on "where they can have the most fun, not where they gain the most experience."

"The local districts don't help either," added Haines, who is the head coach at the University of California at Los Angeles. "They serve age-groupers before they serve the better swimmers."

Coaches point to Canada's dramatic improvement at Montreal as an example of what can be achieved with one administrative force.

"In our country, you've got the A.A.U., N.C.A.A., the high schools and the Olympic Committee," Schubert said. "And you have different rules for everybody and a lot of conflicts. If you set up one central organization for amateur swimming, you would have a place to channel everything."

Swimming is one of the most expensive sports to train in amateur standing. The annual cost to a parent of putting a swimmer through a high-level competitive program, with coaching fees, travel, food, entry fees and miscellaneous expenses, ranges between $2,500 and $3,000.

"Kathy Heidy was driving twice a day from her home to train at our club," said Elm, who coaches the Central Jersey Aquatic Club and Rutgers University. "It was 30 miles each way, which meant about 120 miles every day. She did this for five years. It must have cost her $5 a day in gasoline, not to mention the fatigue from all that travel."

Last April, Mission Viejo instituted a program of daily blood tests to help determine what type of workouts a swimmer could handle without over-stressing the body. Each athlete pays $4 a day for the test; Schubert, with the assistance of a local medical laboratory, receives the results the same day in time to discuss them with the team physician and adjust afternoon workouts.

"I think the tests helped tremendously," said Schubert, who had six swimmers on the U.S. Olympic team, including Brian Goodell (a gold medalist in the 400- and 1,500-meter freestyles) and Shirley Babshoff. "But we couldn't do it without getting a special rate from the lab. The tests normally run $12 to $15 apiece. Even at $4 a day, that's still a lot to ask."

Schubert said a rule in Southern California high schools prohibits swim coaches from working with athletes from September to January and has driven qualified coaches out of high school programs.

"It's these type of problems that bog us down," Haines said.

Some coaches believe a mandate from The Sports Illustrated Commission on Olympic Sports could deliver the necessary funds and the tools for creating a national swimming body.

"Central planning is the heart of it," Deland said. "We've got to have everybody working together. In Canada, East Germany and the Soviet Union, they're taking a much more systematized look at their systems. We're not questioning every system, but we're just doing it. That won't work anymore."

Szen Is Publicity Aide For Seattle Baseball Club

SEATTLE, Sept. 25 (AP)—David Szen, a former Boston Red Sox public relations man, has been named assistant public relations director of the Seattle Mariners, an American League expansion team.

Szen most recently has been an assistant baseball coach at the University of Lowell in Massachusetts. He was a Red Sox public relations man at the end of the 1975 season, and early that season was business manager of the Sturteport entry in the Texas League.

The Golf Clinic How to Better Put First Choose Right

By NICK SEITZ

The prevalent opinion on the Professional Golfers' Association tour is that if you were picking a man to attempt one putt that was worth everything you own—house, car, swizzle stick collection—you would choose Jack Wilham Nicklaus.

Nicklaus one-putted six straight greens the last day to win the $100,000 first prize in the newly-expanded World Series of Golf and save a season that didn't really need saving.

Putting is half the game of golf, and it is the half that we weekend players can physically master. We may not be able to tear the ball out of deep rough with a long iron the way a Jack Nicklaus can, but we certainly can roll the ball 15 feet across a green.

What can we learn about putting from Nicklaus? Choosing the right putter is the first step. Nicklaus uses a medium-weight putter, but points out that the golfer with a jerky stroke probably will be more consistent with a heavy putter.

Nicklaus sets up over a putt feeling he is behind the ball. The ball is opposite his left big toe, his head back of the ball. "I can look through the ball to the target."

Nicklaus works with four key thoughts in stroking the ball.

1. He starts the putter straight back from the ball, smoothly.
2. He keeps the putterhead low, in both directions.
3. He swings the putter firmly through the ball; he does not let it decelerate.
4. He keeps the putterface moving squarely along the initial line of the putt for at least five inches after striking the ball.

When Nicklaus's putting goes off, it usually is because he lifts his left shoulder, which causes his head to come up.

To correct the fault, he concentrates on keeping his left shoulder low through the ball. Also to keep his head and body still an essential of good putting, he holds his breath just prior to and during the stroke.

We shouldn't hold our collective breath waiting to win $100,000 putting

A.S.P.C.A. Is Moving to Restore Its Old Reputation

By R. FLETCHER
Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been for a century. Founded in 1867 as a creature of its charter members as J. Roosevelt, John Astor Jr., Augustus, Peter Cooper and Greenlee. Of late, the year-old organization led in lawsuits and had difficulties. There criticism that the rich-man's club, with no active animal welfare work.

ment consultant and has a miniature schnauzer, while Louis (Jerry) Bishop, senior vice president and treasurer, currently is showing Brittany spaniels, although earlier he was a St. Bernard enthusiast.
Now Duncan Wright has joined the organization as the only full-time and salaried member of the management team. Wright was actively engaged in Washington in helping to push through amendments to the Animal Welfare Act, signed by President Ford earlier this year. He also was a leader in exposing dog fights that were being held across the country.

The Californian resigned as president of the American Dog Owners Association, composed of 1,000 kennel clubs, 85 humane groups and 5,000 individual members, to accept the new post.
For many years a Great Pyrenees fancier, Wright now judges the breed, as well as Newfoundland and Kuvaca. He is an ardent believer in obedience, and all of his Great Pyrenees were degree One, Prince Andre, who was shown to a championship by his owner, was a top-scoring Py with the educated set in 1970, when he gained his C.D. (companion dog). Wright now has a bichon frise, a Great Pyrenees and two mixed breeds.

"I strongly feel that in the humane movement, you must be dedicated to the betterment of all animals," he said, "otherwise you get out. We must set an example for the nation at handling unwanted animals. In the few days I've been here I can see there's a real problem with overpopulation and stray dogs."
This year the A.S.P.C.A. has a $5.2 million budget. "We have reduced our staff from 300 to 222 in an effort to reduce our deficit," said Bishop.
"Our aim is to have a shelter in each borough and we are taking steps to reopen in Queens," he said. "We have, one of the best animal hospitals in the city, maintain the animalport at Kennedy International Airport and have an active cruelty investigation and law enforcement program. Now we also want to make the A.S.P.C.A. more active in national humane affairs."

hulls Lured to Race at Montauk

E. A. FISHERMAN, owner of the most advanced hulls in the world have outkayaked to prepare for a yachting race on a only to multihulls, Montauk Triangle Races two weekends. The which ends today, as the Long Island I-Club Association's friendships, it's also a 1 weekend when the compete for $6,000 in 17 offshore multihulls as Maine and Florida, including such exotic

as America, FT and 1. The promoter, Eric between 40 and 100' Hobbie Cats also were with some Class C and achts will race in two 1g and those rated stional Offshore Multihulls will be awarded the the first flying contest, o can go the farthest achts will race at 40-course between Block uk. The smaller boats will race five-mile courses on Lake Montauk. World speed and efficiency trials are scheduled as well as a slalom course, similar to a downhill ski run, for windsurfers.

The Montauk Yacht Club and Inn, formerly the private yacht club of Cornelius Vanderbilt, is hosting the series. But even before the races begin, the exuberant 31-year-old Eastman was looking ahead to next year.

"I'm going to invite multihulls from every nation in the world," he said. "We're making a movie of this year's races and sending it to every yacht club in the country. Multihulls are the wave of the future. They're generating the same enthusiasm that surfing and skiing did when they were just beginning to be popular."

Eastman should know. Although he teaches high school anthropology and owns two restaurants, he's built surfboards for 10 years and has been ranked in the top 10 by the World Surfing Association three times.

Two schooner races are scheduled for October. Mystic Seaport's ninth annual race in Long Island Sound will be held next Saturday. According to the race committee, all schooners must be "sea-worthy, have water-tight, self-bailing cockpits, and must be sailed in normal cruising trim."

A week later, schooners will be competing in New York Bay in the South Street Seaport Museum's Mayor's Cup Race. But the contest will continue once the race is over.

The schooners will be assigned anchorages off Liberty Island. Friday night and after the Saturday race they must return to the anchorages. Race committee teams then will board the yachts and take bearings to determine how well the crew was sailing.

To determine the winning yacht, the speed over the course, on corrected time, will count 40 percent. Seamanship in starting and exiting will count 20 percent and the ability to return to the starting anchorage will count the final 40 percent.

The Staten Island Ferry John F. Kennedy will follow the race and be open to the public.

West Coast sailors took home the glory in the Faded Glory Hobie 16 Nationals held in Falmouth, Mass., recently. Jerry King of Oahu, Hawaii, led the 450-boat fleet over the line followed by Randy Hatfield of San Clemente, Calif., and Bob Seaman of Marina Del Rey, Calif.

Another national trophy was taken out of the country altogether. Jens Hookanson, 16, of St. Croix, Virgin Islands, won the Sunfish North American championships at the United States Sailing Center at Association Island, N.Y.

Two Indiana sailors followed. Greg Gust of Fort Wayne and Steve Holdman of Muncie.

Surfboard plus sail equals windsurfer. This high-performance class will run slalom at Montauk Triangle Races.

Tales of Three Cities: A Mixed Bag

In Utah, a place of avenues wide enough for a wagon and four oxen to make a U-turn. . . . In Japan, a megalopolis of meditation and monorails. . . . In Spain, a tapestry of a town

Salt Lake City: The Founder Is Palpably Present

By MILTON VIORST

No wonder Brigham Young, emerging with his intrepid party of 147 Mormon pioneers from the western exit of Emigration Canyon, said, "This is the place." What he saw on the floor of the valley below was as beautiful a setting for a city as exists in America.

From virtually any spot in the Salt Lake basin one can look in every direction upon the Rocky Mountains. Even in the late spring the farther peaks glisten with snow, in stark contrast to the soft green foothills that descend to the city itself.

Most Americans think Brigham came upon the valley by chance. In fact, when he set out from Nauvoo, Ill., in the winter of 1846, he not only knew that he was leaving persecution behind, but he also had explorers' reports to tell him where he was going. He had besides a celestial vision of what he would find, Mormons say, though he needed Jim Bridger, the frontiersman, to lead his wagon train over the mountains and into the Promised Land.

Brigham—all Mormons refer to him by his first name with a mixture of awe and affection—continues in spirit to hover over the valley, which he ruled for 30 years in the name of his religion, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He built churches and temples, made the desert bloom with a network of canals, founded a newspaper and a university, constructed railroads, factories and theaters. From Salt Lake City the Mormons fanned out with their settlements to establish a dominion they control as thoroughly today as they did in Brigham's time.

Salt Lake City is a place of wide avenues (Brigham ordered them wide enough for a wagon and four oxen to make a U-turn) and solid homes, and looks on its face much like a dozen middle-sized cities from the Appalachians to the Rockies.

In winter, skiers head for the superb slopes an hour away, and in summer tourists sometimes drive an hour outside the city to the beaches of the Great Salt Lake. The resplendent Hotel Utah, begun in Brigham's era, remains a classic Western hostelry, and a recent influx of good restaurants has injected a more worldly flavor. Still, this is a very quiet city.

What is unique is that it is the capital of the Mormon universe, where the people are known to be clean, industrious and disciplined. They are proud of their faith, courteous about explaining its doctrines and anxious for you to embrace it with them. They are the heirs of Brigham, whose presence remains palpable almost everywhere.

For the tourist, Brigham might best be met at the "This is the Place" monument, a 10-minute drive from downtown, where the 148 pioneers came out of the canyon. The Park Service has built an information center there and, inside, a tape recording, coordinated with a dozen scenes and hundreds of figures on a vividly brushed mural, recounts the long and arduous westward trek of the wagon train that crossed the continent—the snowy encampments, the hazardous river crossings and all.

The real Brigham, however, is more tangible downtown, especially in the Lion House, once his official residence, and in the adjacent Beehive House, once his office as both territorial governor and head of the church. Both houses—spacious and discreetly ornate, with heavy columns and a widow's walk—reflect his New England upbringing and, in their appointments, his taste for good living.

Both have been restored magnificently.

Tokyo: Culture Shock Makes The Head Spin

By HERBERT R. LOTTMAN

Taxi doors open and close automatically, and if you are a bumpkin from America you may get bopped a few times before you remember it. A monorail brings passengers from the airport to the edge of the business district; it is a rapid, obstacle-hopping mini-train that runs over waterways, swoops under bridges, sneaks between buildings and parallels (and mocks) jammed expressways.

Tokyo's painstakingly thorough assimilation of Western ways has reached the point where the city occasionally seems to have leapt-frogged into the 21st century. Yet everywhere the old and the traditional are still in evidence, often in curious, even bizarre, juxtaposition with the new.

In my hotel's Chinese restaurant one evening an adjoining alcove was occupied by a wedding party, the bride wearing a traditional top-heavy head-dress, the groom a tuxedo. They were listening to the warbling sounds of koto, shamisen and taiko (the Japanese harp, guitar and drum), while at the same time a medley of Viennese waltzes was blaring from loudspeakers at the four corners of the room in which I was sitting. I asked the head-waiter what he could do about that. He replied that he couldn't switch off the master control to stop the piped music, but that if I would be patient the traditional concert coming from the wedding group would soon be over.

On Kanda Street I looked at old scrolls and rice paper books in second-hand bookshops whose doors open automatically. I placed a call at the overseas telephone office and found myself on the line to New York in less than 60 seconds—the clerk meanwhile figuring out time and charges on an abacus. In the modern underground shopping centers that are a feature of downtown Tokyo I came upon women wearing elaborate kimonos; in skyscraper offices I watched the endless bowing among business associates. A bench for meditation in a Zen temple carries a "Pepe!" sign, and cold Pepsis in cans can be punched out of a coin machine near the counter where good luck prayers are sold. The famous Zojo-ji Temple, whose massive gate is listed as a cultural treasure, stands literally in the shadow of Tokyo's Eiffel-like tower, the highest steel girder construction (1,082 feet) in the world, taller than the original in Paris.

The first time I visited Japan this culture clash had spun my head around and to an extent it still does. When I

Toledo: A Day Trip Misses The Best of It

By MARY LOUISE WILKINSON

I sat cramped in a chartered bus carrying a load of American tourists back to Madrid after a day trip to Toledo. In seven hours, the tour guide had hustled us from one landmark to another—into the great cathedral, down endless corridors of the Alcazar, through El Greco's home—all the while spouting a dizzying spiel of facts and dates, as well as admonishing us at each stop, "Hurry, hurry up, you have only a few minutes."

I was tired, footsore. My recollections of Toledo were fast becoming a blur. I turned to the woman in the window seat and asked in weary confusion, "Did we see the Church of Santa Maria la Blanca?" She thought for a moment. "I don't remember. I'd have to look up my notes."

I closed my eyes and thought, "There has to be a better way."

One sunny afternoon in early fall my husband, Bob, and I drove out from Madrid for a weekend in Toledo. After endless miles of olive trees and

HOW TO TURN A 7-DAY VACATION INTO A 7-DAY VACATION.

Most 7-day vacations are just 5-day vacations with a day of travel at each end.

A Holland America vacation ends this waste of precious vacation time. The minute you board in New York, you can begin circling the dance floor instead of an airport.

While you cruise, you can shoot skeet over the ocean, drive golf balls into the world's bluest green or just sit there and watch the flying fish go by.

And there's no better way to cruise than on a Holland America ship. Only Holland America offers you a complete breakfast and lunch out by the pool or in the dining room every day. And Holland America not only serves you superb meals, but offers you a choice of mealtimes most convenient for you. Plus our midnight buffet and 24-hour room service. All with no extra charges, and no tipping required.

You can also enjoy first run movies, first-rate entertainers and all the dancing you can stand. It's the most vacation you can get in 7 days. And you can get it on Holland America's s.s. Rotterdam to Nassau and Bermuda (the only 7-day cruise that includes both) and on the s.s. Susquehanna to Bermuda (with 3 days at sea and 4 days at Front St. in downtown Hamilton).

If you have a little more time, you can get even more vacation on the s.s. Veendam 10 and 11-day Caribbean cruises.

Each ship offers you the elegant service and experience of a cruise line that's been cruising the world for 103 years.

So if you'd like a vacation that gets off the ground fast, check the schedule below. Call your travel agent or mail the schedule with your name and address to Holland America Cruises, Two Penn Plaza, New York 10001. Or call (212) 760-3880.

Notes: Less Waiting the White House

has 1.2 million visitors have through the White House in eight months of this Bicentennial—an increase of about 10 per cent over the comparable period of the last year. This year's visitors having an easier time of it than predecessors, many of them lined up to an hour to get into the Executive building.

White House tours have had to wait 5 to 10 minutes to get in, he says.

The tour takes a minimum of about 15 minutes and covers the East Room, the Green Room, the Blue Room, the Red Room and the State Dining Room. It is not conducted by a guide, but visitors are free to ask questions of the uniformed guards on duty; they've been briefed on the history of the White House and are usually able to answer knowledgeably.

There is another type of White House tour—one that is escorted by a guide—but it is limited to about 1,000 people a day and is offered only to visitors who have made arrangements well in advance through their Senator or Representative. This Congressional or "V.L.P." tour, as it is called, starts around 8 A.M., and though that is rather early for most people, there are advantages: Visitors see more rooms and there is hardly any waiting.

DISCOUNT DOINGS

In recent years three European countries—Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands—have offered travelers free coupon booklets good for a night's hotel stay and discounts on sightseeing trips, museum admissions and the like. Available under certain conditions, the booklets were an inducement to visit various cities in each country. The Belgian booklet is still free and will be available at least through Dec. 31, a spokeswoman for the Belgian National Tourist Office says. But the Danish program has been canceled for this fall and winter and the Dutch booklet is no longer free.

According to the Danish National Tourist Office, the Danish coupon booklet which, unlike the Belgian plan, was not offered during the peak summer travel period, has been shelved because travel interests in Denmark had been unable to agree on changes. However, the tourist office expects that the idea will be revived in some form or other by the fall of 1977.

As for the Dutch program, which like the Danish one is offered only in the off-season, the new coupon booklet carries a minimum price tag of $15. A more elaborate package costs $20.

... plus a little extra for letting us try out our Italian on him.

According to a spokesman for the Netherlands National Tourist Office, the change came about because the free program "had become a bit of a burden" on local tourist offices. Inflation was also a factor, he said, adding that there was a feeling among tourist officials that the traveler "would place more value on a paid-for travel bargain than a free package."

The new Dutch coupon booklet will be valid from Nov. 1 through next March 31 and will offer the $15 purchaser a night's stay in a first-class hotel, breakfast and a choice of lunch or dinner, a welcome drink and a transfer from Schiphol International Airport to either Amsterdam, The Hague or Rotterdam. Discounts on car rental, sightseeing tours and domestic airline flights are also included. The value of the booklet is said to be at least $100. The traveler who chooses the $20 booklet is entitled to stay in a superior-class hotel.

Under the Belgian program, the traveler who stays at least one night in selected hotels in any of six cities receives a second night's lodging free. The plan also provides a free day at the races and a free opera or ballet ticket as well as discounts on meals, rental cars, train tickets, sightseeing tours and souvenirs. Were all coupons in the Belgian booklet redeemed, its value would be $260, tourist officials say. The six cities participating are Antwerp, Bruges, Brussels, Ghent, Liege and Namur.

In order to qualify for either the Belgian or Dutch coupon booklet, the traveler must use a scheduled airline and make the country whose booklet he selects his first or last stop in Europe.

Letters: Passports Pose a Safety Risk

To the Editor:

On a recent WNET-TV documentary on "Terrorism," a hijacker revealed that on one mission he was able to separate Jews from non-Jews by the passports the passengers were holding.

During the recent "Entebbe incident," only Israelis and a few American Jews were required to remain as prisoners of the hijackers and of the Ugandan Government.

Two people I know were born in Haifa, Israel, and are now naturalized United States citizens with United States passports. Their place of birth is listed on the second line of the United States passport as required. This unnecessary information could endanger their security, limit their freedom of travel and deprive them of their liberty.

If a naturalized citizen has all the privileges and immunities of a native-born (except with regard to running for the nation's two highest offices), it is at best superfluous and at worst dangerous to allow "birthplace" to be listed on passports for any foreign official or inkeeper to see.

Harvey S. KARTEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

A spokesman for the Passport Office, Washington, D.C., replies: The Passport Office is aware that the statement of birth in the passport may, in some instances, occasion difficulty for foreign-born citizens traveling to certain areas. The problem, however, cannot be solved by unilateral action on the part of the Department of State. Other governments insist that place of birth be shown on their passports.

Moreover, foreign governments require a statement of place of birth on documents other than the passport, such as entry forms and visa applications.

Under Israeli law, a person born in Israel, even though he is a naturalized citizen of the United States, must possess an Israeli passport for entry into and departure from Israel.

MOTEL DISINFECTANT

To the Editor:

I wonder if any of my fellow travelers (by auto) are turned off by the sickly disinfectant used in most motels? I would much prefer a hospital odor any day if a disinfectant has to be used at all.

Whether or not this sickly odor is put in air-conditioned ducts or just sprayed by the cleaning staff I do not know. I have just completed a lengthy trip and would not complain if this happened once—but in every motel (I stayed in 12) it was the same, even in the halls and lobby.

For this reason I hesitate to take another trip.

VIEW VS. MOVIE

To the Editor:

Sometime back you had a number of letters in the Travel Section from readers who didn't like to watch movies while flying. These writers complained of being forced to pull down the window shades next to their seats when they would have preferred to look out. The attached letter from the Civil Aeronautics Board, Washington, D. C. seem to indicate that any such requests from a flight crew may safely be ignored.

GEORGE HANSEN
Washington, D. C.

Response by the C.A.B.'s Office of the Consumer Advocate to Reader Hansen's inquiry: We have carefully examined the pertinent Board regulations, the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended, and the many air carrier tariffs governing the provision of inflight entertainment services. The results of this research indicate that nothing speaks to the question you have raised. We would assume that you may raise or lower the window shade adjacent to your seat in any manner you choose unless instructed to the contrary by a crew member for reasons of safety.

PHONING FROM ABROAD

To the Editor:

Reading your "phoning from abroad" letters reminds me of my experience a couple of years ago that was more horrendous than any your readers have yet reported.

When I arrived in Paris and checked into the Hotel Montalembert on the Left Bank, I decided to make use of the convenience of the hotel switch-

A rare chance to enjoy a 12-day Gulf cruise—with all the comforts of a round-the-world vessel.

There is something special about the elegance of a round-the-world vessel. You sense it on no other ship. There is an uncrowded vastness to its decks and lounges. A comfortable spaciousness to its limited number of cabins. A deft, nimble graciousness to its seasoned crew.

Most people who take short cruises rarely experience the exhilarating pleasure of such a vessel. But this fall you can sample it to the full. For 12 glorious days. Aboard the Royal Viking Sea.

Before leaving on her third round-the-world cruise in January, 1977, the Sea will take two 12-day Gulf/Caribbean cruises. Here is your chance to combine the convenience of a short cruise with the luxury of a long cruise. Even people who have sailed these waters a dozen times before will find the experience extraordinary. It begins the moment you come aboard.

There are a mere 289 cabins, all First Class. 94% of all passengers enjoy sweeping, outside views. With fewer people aboard than ordinary short-cruise vessels, the 300-man crew has ample time to care for everyone.

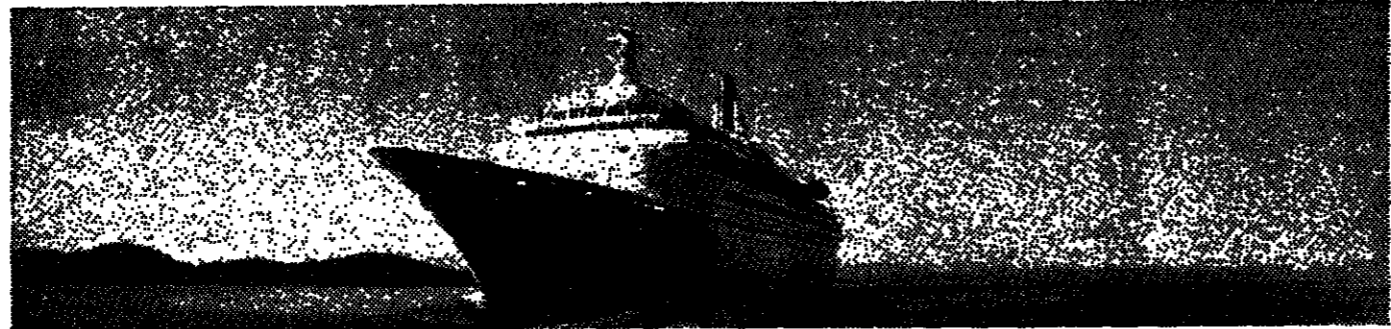

The experience continues throughout the ship, thanks to a spaciousness that lets you live your days as actively or as quietly as you choose. There are deck games, and quiet out-of-the-way lounges. There is a swimming pool large enough for swimming, and decks quiet enough for dreaming. There is rousing evening entertainment, and deserted moonlit railings. The dining room, set high on an upper deck, is large enough to serve everyone at a single, relaxed seating. This freedom to vary your pace to match your moods is the hallmark of luxurious, lengthy cruising. The Sea expresses it beautifully.

Along the way you will visit Playa del Carmen and Cozumel, Mexico. Georgetown, Grand Cayman, Montego Bay, Jamaica. And Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Ports carefully chosen to offer you a variety of shore amusements: beach-strolling, sight-seeing, shopping.

If you are thinking of taking a short cruise this fall, here is a marvelous opportunity to take it with long-cruise luxury. Aboard the round-the-world Royal Viking Sea. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit.

Each cruise offers a choice of embarkation ports. The first departs Fort Lauderdale November 16, and New Orleans November 19. The second departs Fort Lauderdale November 29, and New Orleans December 2.

Now on Sale from TWA.

The spectacular West is now on sale at TWA. There's no better time to see it. Because right now TWA's Discover America fares are the lowest they'll be for the year. And you can fly any-day-of the week, any time of the day.

Once you get where you're going, you can take a TWA Freewheeler vacation. The most flexible, value-packed fly/drive in the business. Whether you want to just fly to the West or tour it at your own pace, you may never get another chance like this.

TWA's Discover America Night Coach Excursion Fare.

Save 25%

Reservations for TWA's Discover America Fares must be made at least 14 days before you want to fly. In order to save 25% off the regular Coach fare, you must book on a TWA Designated Night Coach. Tickets must be purchased no more than 10 days after you've made your reservation and at least 14 days before your departure or return. Stay 7-30 days. There's a limited number of seats per flight on which we offer these savings, so make plans early.

You'll get an air-conditioned Ramada car with unlimited mileage plus a choice of 264 Ramada, Quality and Best Western Hotels and Motels. (Some hotels have seasonal or year-round surcharges which are payable locally.)

TWA also has two other fly/drive programs so ask your Travel Agent about the Hertz Freewheeler and Hertz Holiday Inn plans, too. Prices are for a minimum of 7 nights, based on double occupancy, and do not include airfare.

TWA's Freewheeler plans are available to Los Angeles, San Francisco, Las Vegas, Phoenix, Tucson, Denver and Albuquerque. So pick the one that's best for you and your family and head West. Ask for Tour IT6-TWFL-6.

Cruise the South Seas on ships as friendly and warm as Polynesia.

No other vacation can match the splendor of a South Seas cruise with the friendly Americans, the SS Mariposa or SS Monterey. And no other cruise can rival the incomparable service and friendly spirit found only aboard these two proud ships of the U.S. Registry.

The ships. The SS Mariposa and SS Monterey were specifically designed for Pacific cruising. They're large enough to have everything luxury liners should have yet small enough (with just 330 passengers) to offer a cordial, intimate atmosphere.

Isn't that the way you'd like to see the South Seas?

The service. With a crew member for almost every passenger, we have time to pamper you in our famous grand manner. First initiated by sister ships over 90 years ago, it's a way of life that has become the hallmark of luxury cruising in the Pacific.

The spirit. It's our famous Aloha Spirit—as friendly and warm as the people you'll meet Down Under. It's this spirit of hometown hospitality that really sets our cruises apart.

In 43 days round-trip from San Francisco or Los Angeles you'll cruise 15,000 miles of peaceful Pacific. And experience all the enchantment of the fabled South Seas. Or factory cigarettes. The rejects are later stripped and the tobacco is fed back into the machine.

Since my machine made L&M's, filters had to be added. The filters come in five-inch lengths. Inside the machine they're cut into thirds and each segment is attached between two tubes of tobacco to produce a cigarette 6 1/2 inches long with tobacco at either end and a filter in the middle. Then the filter is sliced in half to produce two finished cigarettes—also at the rate of 3,600 per minute.

The finished cigarettes are stuffed, 20 at a time, into a foil-paper wrapper which is immediately covered with the printed paper of the pack. At this point there's another testing process. As an illustration, our guide breaks a cigarette on the line and—sure enough—a few seconds later a pack shows up in the reject trough with the broken cigarette inside. Then the seals and cellophane are attached and the finished packs are stuffed into cartons—at the rate of 180 packs a minute.

The cartons are carried on an overhead conveyor belt to a packing machine. An employee unfolds corrugated-paper cases and feeds them one-by-one into the machine. It's the only manual part of the entire operation. The cases are filled with 180 cartons, sealed and carried on another conveyor belt to the shipping room. (The sealing of the cartons and the cases is in a sense an exercise in futility, since each case and carton must be opened by the distributor so that every pack can be marked with the appropriate local tax stamp.)

All the factory's employees, our hostess explains, are given a free pack of cigarettes each day, apparently as an inducement to prevent pilferage. On our way out, we visitors were also given a complimentary pack. It was about time. I was dying for a smoke, and—one thing I discovered—you can't smoke in a cigarette factory.

Take a Caribbean cruise American Express style.

Take a 13/14-day winter cruise on the TSS *Atlas American Express wants your Caribbean cruise to be an all-out success.

So fast we chartered a ship. Not just any ship. We chartered a beauty. She's everything a 14-day cruise ship should be.

Three swimming pools. Five bars. Three lounges. A theater. Shopping gallery. Sauna. Discotheque. And staterooms that convert to sitting rooms by day. Plus 20,000 feet of open deck space.

In fact, she's the flagship of the Epirotiki Line. Nothing less would do for you and American Express.

Then we refined the menu.

We saw to it that the menus were deliciously Continental with an occasional Greek specialty.

In short, we made this a very appetizing 14-day cruise.

We handpicked our cruise director.

We singled out an experienced man to make sure the service wasn't just up-to-par, but above. To be certain the entertainment was first-rate. From the authentic Greek musicians to the swinging dance band.

To make sure your Caribbean cruise was an all-out success.

We chartered an enviable itinerary.

Any cruise line would be happy to follow our path. We sail from Port

A 13-day cruise leaves Jan. 2 (excluding Barbados). 14-day cruises sail Jan. 15, 29, Feb. 12, 26, March 12.

Don't let a little thing like cash stand in the way of Pan Am's fall bargains.

Save up to 50% to:

Amsterdam	Hamburg
Belgrade	Istanbul
Bergen	London
Berlin	Moscow
Brussels	Munich
Bucharest	Oslo
Budapest	Prague
Copenhagen	Rome
Frankfurt	Warsaw

To take the vacation of a lifetime, you don't have to save for a lifetime. Or to take a business trip, you don't have to have a lavish expense account. Because now Pan Am is offering low fall air fares to 18 cities all over Europe.

Bargains on fares.

Starting with our regular economy fares, which are especially good for people on business trips since they have no restrictions, you can save from 13% to 21% over regular summer economy fares. And we have more low fares that can save you even more than the low fall economy fares.

For example, our 14/21-day fares. If you can stay at least 14 days and not more than 21, you can save up to 22% more.

Then there're our 22/45-day fares. If you're lucky enough to have that much time for Europe, you can save 30% to 40% more.

And last, our Budget Fares. Which were very low to begin with and are even lower now. Because you can save about 50% over fall economy fares. All you have to do is buy your ticket 2 months in advance and spend 22 to 45 days vacationing in Europe. (Which should be easy enough.) Naturally, a fare that can save you so much is subject to other conditions and restrictions regarding travel dates and itinerary changes. Your travel agent can give you all the details.

The flights are regularly scheduled ones. On our comfortable 747s, you'll get a choice from 3 entrees in economy. And every flight has 2 movies to choose from ($2.50 per headset in economy).

Bargains on tours.

Of course our fall bargains apply to our tour prices also.

One-Weekers. Two-Weekers. Three-Weekers. London Show Tours. Fly/Drives.

Pan Am has tours to just about any place in Europe. For just about any budget. Just ask your travel agent about Pan Am's World tours to Europe.

Use the American Express Card.

Just tell your travel agent or our ticket agent that you want to pay for your Pan Am fall bargain vacation with the American Express Card.

You can even extend your payments with the American Express Card "Sign & Fly" or "Sign & Travel" plans. If you don't have a card, you can pick up an application wherever the American Express Card is welcomed. Or you can apply for one by calling toll-free (800) 528-8000.

But don't take advantage of our bargains just because they're bargains. Take advantage of our bargains because they're fall bargains. When the hysteria of summer subsides. The crowds of tourists have gone. But while the weather is still nice.

And with foreign exchange rates being better than they've been in a long time, your cash or the American Express Card can go a lot further.

PAN AM.

attempted to order Western food, such as the kind of steaks available in Japanese restaurants, I was in for another kind of culture shock: paying the price of an angry god's demand for eating out of tradition. Even Japanese housewives find that skirtloin costs them close to $10 a pound. They simply don't have any land left for grazing in Japan: beef is Japan's lobster. Or to turn it around, what is their cattle, a comparison I found in a statement by Japanese fishermen protesting the Western campaign against whaling.

Japan's density is legendary, but in fact it is a density limited to that string of cities running from Tokyo down to Kyoto, Kobe and Osaka: together they form the Tokaido megalopolis. (Half Japan's population of 110 million must survive in metropolitan districts covering only 2 percent of the land.) Everything is concentrated here, the money, the brains, the industry, the universities. The rest of the country is felt to be too hilly and too distant. And so all of inhabited Japan may seem to be an unending industrial and residential suburb, starting at Tokyo Bay, spreading south like an oil slick. In Tokyo itself, residential neighborhoods coexist not only with office buildings but with factories. Americans used to joke about the farmer with an oil well in his backyard. In Tokyo it is occasionally an oil refinery.

"What do you think of those buildings?" asked a Japanese friend. I looked at a high wall of slab constructions, closer together than they would be in the urban planning with which I was familiar. The Japanese call them danchi. Each uniform tiny balcony had a family's laundry hanging out to dry—a kind of vertical Naples. The surreal industrial city-scape surrounding the project was typical of Tokyo's peripheral wards: tall smokestacks, sprawling factories separated from each other by patches of old wooden houses, or occasionally a bit of green in which a temple or a shrine was hidden.

"Very big," I replied cautiously. "It's quite hard to get an apartment in one of those buildings," she said, with the voice of one who had tried. "There is a long waiting list." For most Tokyo residents housing like this represents the ultimate dream. It means an end to the hour or two of travel to distant suburbs at the close of the working day, to vestigial village streets with open sewers.

And so the 11 million people of Tokyo demand still greater density. It often seems to encourage an anything-goes architecture where no space is sacred—save sacred space, so that any empty lot which is not a construction site is bound to be the garden of a temple or one of Tokyo's several royal residences, the homes of the Emperor's sons, and daughters. There are 44 housing units per acre in Tokyo's most crowded ward, a density 30 percent higher than that of Manhattan, but a Tokyo danchi of 11 to 14 stories manages a density more than three times greater than that.

So the assimilation of Western ways seem to represent an effort by the Japanese to brainwash themselves, to adjust to a world where too many Japanese compete for too little land and a woefully finite supply of raw materials. When you have seen this densely urban countryside, looked from the window of your bullet train for pasture and not found it, you begin to understand the need for the Japanese people's rigorous self-discipline—and why a steak or a glass of orange juice has to cost so much.

The effects of Westernization are everywhere.

While I was in Tokyo a homeowner won a lawsuit against developers who were putting up an eight-story building alongside his small house in downtown Tokyo. He had argued that the new building would cut off his sun; he was ill and needed the sunshine. The plaintiff, however, was a wealthy man, the president of a company, and could afford to carry his case to court. The rest of the people make do by miniaturizing nature: Hence the famous bonsai trees, which in a flower pot create the illusion of woodland. Pocket-size gardens confront you everywhere, in alleys between houses, behind the smallest restaurants.

Inside their danchi, too, each family perpetuates centuries-old traditions. Young women still learn the tea ceremony: Performing it well is a must if they wish to become engaged.

A Japanese business friend insisted on accompanying me to the Akhabara district, a Broadway lined not with bars or movie houses but with brightly lit sidewalk displays of the latest electronic gadgets, sold at discount in the atmosphere of a year-round Neapolitan street fair. From there we drove in my friend's air-conditioned limousine to the smaller shops of the Ueno district. I kept looking at precision watches but I noticed that my host had stopped to stare at an array of small, venomous snakes in the window of one particularly busy shop. Some of the snakes were alive, others were pickled in jars alongside trays of powder. The powder was a reliable tonic for virility, he assured me, when mixed with water as an after-dinner potion. "Not on an empty stomach," he added with a grimace.

We ducked into an alley where business seemed even livelier, the storefront displays more inviting. Among them a narrow path led through an eerily lit wooden gate up steps to an altar obscured by a smoke cloud of burning incense.

"It's the shopkeeper's favorite place of worship," he commented.

My friend worked on the executive floor of a steel-and-glass skyscraper, where no door needed to be opened by human effort. I knew that as soon as I finished my shopping he would rush home, put on his kimono, sit on a tatami mat while his wife made him green tea, which he would drink silently and thoughtfully, as if it were another love potion.

On a Sunday my Japanese host's secretary offered to lead me behind the facades of modern, Westernized Japan. "Let's start with Asakusa," she said (she pronounced it A-sak'sa). We went there by subway, which thanks to the platform signs in English I was learning to use alone. We emerged from that modern urban transit system into a teeming Oriental bazaar.

We stood at the vermilion Kaminari gate, just off the busy boulevard, where a giant red paper lantern covered with decorative calligraphy helps dispel the violence of the pair of Buddhist statues, the gods of wind and thunder, warding off evil at either side of the entrance. They do not, in any case, ward off commerce, for the long Nakamise street leading from the gate to the temple itself is lined with an extraordinary variety of small shops selling trinkets and souvenirs, umbrellas, vases, pearls and watches. And at the far end of this tunnel of shops, in the sanctum: a flag-decked inner gate, an oversized vat emitting incense-scented smoke (if you touch the part of your body needing healing after warming your hand with the smoke, you are supposed to be cured). Through the smoke appears the tapered roof of the sanctum-sanctorum—a temple dedicated to Buddha as a she-god, or Kannon.

"There is a saying," my guide observed, "that a husband and wife should not go inside this temple together. When I came to Asakusa with my husband we suddenly looked at each other, remembering the warning. We laughed about it, but we are divorced now."

Next we walked through a Shinto shrine. I learned that most Japanese practiced the dominant religions of Japan—Buddhism and Shintoism—simultaneously, or alternatively. One may be married in a Shinto shrine, for example, but the funeral might take place in a Buddhist temple.

We returned by subway to the center of town, hard by the headquarters of some of the largest Japanese conglomerates and the seat of government. Behind high walls, removed not only in space but in time from modern Japan, white-robed priests with tall black caps moved silently through the compound of the Yasukuni Shrine, which includes the main shrine for ancestor worship, a separate prayer hall, and a grim concrete war museum, betraying the irrepressible bias of Shinto for military glory. General MacArthur had attempted to downgrade Shinto in order to defuse militarism and emperor worship. More recently, I noted, a Japanese artillery piece captured by American G.I.'s on Okinawa had been turned over to the Yasukuni museum as a gesture of friendship by the American Legion.

We walked past those gates through which the Imperial Messenger enters each year to dedicate offerings from the Emperor, and watched as a group of war widows in their best kimono filed out of buses to participate in a ceremony for their dead. Then, taking a gravel path behind the main shrine buildings, we came upon a group of women in black uniforms and aprons who were tidying up the rock garden of the Divine Pond.

A minute later we were outside the compound again, facing high-rise buildings with Sony and Hitachi signs, and the ubiquitous tracks of the Japanese National Railways.

Bypassing Toledo's Frenetic Tourist Trail

somber pines, broken only by an occasional whitewashed village, suddenly around a bend in the road, there it was. Toledo—the medieval capital of Spain—rose like a misted tapestry in dark reds and distant grays, seemingly as fragile and impermanent as a mirage.

Yet, once past the ochre-toned buildings of the outskirts, the Puerta de Bisagra (the main gate), built by the Moors and later embellished with the double-headed eagle of Emperor Carlos V, loomed as a formidably solid guardian. The walled town perches on a hilly plateau above steep precipices leading down to the Tagus River which coils around it protectively.

Our hotel, the Parador Nacional Conde de Orgaz, is built on a bluff across the river and follows the traditional regional architecture of pale stucco and rusty brick walls, dark wooden beams and red tile roofs. The 22-room parador (government-owned inn) has high-ceilinged, spacious public rooms furnished with deep leather chairs and couches, regional artifacts, fine paintings and an intimate atmosphere. Best of all, no tour buses are allowed.

Señorita Pilar Ramirez, who runs the inn, welcomed us, asking, "Is this your first trip to Toledo?" Recalling my previous visit, I nodded assent. "Then your first view should be from the terrace," she said, ushering us through tall window doors. "Aquí tienen Toledo."

Toledo rose before us in all its majesty—from the castle of San Servando and the square-turreted Alcazar on the right, past the remains of Roman bridges that once spanned the river, to San Juan de los Reyes church on the left. Below, the hillside slid abruptly downward, brown and almost without vegetation, huge gray boulders strewn about like the playthings of a careless giant.

A wedding party converged on the terrace to pose for a photographer. Later I was to learn that this is a local tradition—to have pictures taken against the arras of Toledo after the church ceremony.

Reluctantly, we left the terrace and were shown upstairs to our room. Like all the other rooms at the parador, ours had a balcony offering the awesome panorama of Toledo. The afternoon stillness was so palpable that it seemed natural to lower our voices and speak just above a whisper.

Later, we drove into town past cigarrales (country houses of the affluent named after the cicada), and across the Puente de San Martin, the one-lane bridge over the Tagus. Traffic flowed both ways and was regulated by stoplights—an anachronism on the Moorish landscape with its cragged towers. We bumped up crooked streets and parked beside San Juan de los Reyes, often called the "church of the chains" since the exterior walls are hung with shackles brought to Isabella and Ferdinand by grateful Christian slaves freed in 1492 from Moslem bondage in Granada.

As Bob was locking the car, a man wearing an official-looking cap limped up. He was a car-parker, a job reserved in Toledo for the handicapped. Accepting a few pesetas in exchange for the printed ticket he handed us, he explained that one could park anywhere in Toledo all that day for the one small fee. Provided, of course, that a place to park could be found.

Toledo is built on a series of hills and is very much a walking town. Bordering the small plaza in front of the church were several tourist stores displaying three-legged labor chairs, Damascus ware, swords, blue and white ceramics, embroidered linens. With difficulty we resisted the urge to buy, buy, buy. Our guidebooks had clearly indicated that prices in Madrid were lower.

We walked up the Calle del Angel. Although it was part of the main route through town, the street had no sidewalks, causing us to flatten ourselves in doorways or dodge into alleyways as cars came whizzing down the winding street.

The houses were crowded side by side, some seeming almost to touch each other, while several were connected by cobertizos, extra rooms bridging the street. The small windows inevitably had neat curtains and pots of geraniums.

This was the old Jewish quarter until Isabella ran the Jews out of Spain. When the Jews were expelled, the dungeon-like cellars of the homes along Calle del Angel and its side streets became part of an underground railroad. Tunnels dug under the buildings led to El Greco's house and from there, by dark, fugitives could slip down the steep slope to the Tagus and safety.

Pausing at a small open space in the street where it was reasonably sure no one would run over us, we spotted a window with a single painting displayed on an easel. We peered hesitantly in the half-opened doorway and heard a hearty voice call out, "Pasen. Come in, come in." This was the atelier of Francisco Sansuguet, Toledo's resident painter. He explained in Spanish that he had studied and worked in Paris for a number of years but "there was a restlessness within me that made me come back home, home to Toledo."

Sansuguet's house is typical of the dwellings behind the walls. There is one large room upstairs and two tiny ones on the ground level, but the cueva (cave) underneath is large and more of a grotto than a mere basement. Part of the Jews' escape route, it stretches out under someone else's domain, as many Toledo cuevas do. Sansuguet had tiled his in red and painted the vaulted ceiling and the walls white for the better exhibition of his canvases, mainly of Toledo in all its phases. Bob and I were invited to sign the guest book and to try a glass of sherry from a keg in the cueva.

"You should come back for the torchlight processions during Holy Week," said Sansuguet, "and in June for Corpus Christi, Toledo does itself proud then. Tapestries and embroidered manteles hang from all the balconies. Fresh thyme is strewn on the pavements, the streets becoming more and more aromatic as the thyme is crushed underfoot."

Stepping out into the Calle del Angel, we heard a rhythmic tapping of metal and crossed the street to find out what it was. Inside a small one-room workshop a half dozen men were making the lamps, punching out holes in intricate patterns by hand. The foreman put down his work and offered us a sample book showing all their designs.

Outside, the evening sun was setting, casting mysterious shadows along the cobble streets, darkening the alleyways, enveloping the town in silence. Old women with black head kerchiefs, black felt shoes and black quilted housecoats were hurrying home, their nylon tote bags bulging with meat wrapped in newspaper, oranges, the

If You Go . . .

. . . to Toledo and plan an overnight stay, reserve your room well before taking off for Spain. Two pleasant choices are the four-star Parador Nacional Conde de Orgaz and the three-star Hostal del Cardenal. (All hotels in the official hotel list in Spain are classified according to room rates, from the least expensive of one star to the most expensive of five stars.) The Parador charges about $22 for a double room. A continental breakfast of coffee, tea or chocolate with sweet rolls costs about $1. Juice, eggs and cereal are extra. A four-course meal, either at lunch or dinner, will run about $8. Recommended are varied hors d'oeuvres (entrameses variados), gazpacho, fresh trout and veal. For dessert there is flan, ice cream or marzipan.

The Hostal del Cardenal, to the right of the Puerta de Bisagra, is built up against the Moorish walls and has a charming garden where meals are served on fine days. A double room costs about $12. The hotel is run by the Botin brothers whose Madrid restaurant was a favorite haunt of Ernest Hemingway. Best bets are trout and the roast sucking pig or lamb ($5 a person).—M.L.W.

green tomatoes that Spaniards prefer and loaves of fresh-baked bread. Past them swung young couples, arm in arm—some dressed alike in bluejeans or wool pants with short, tight sweaters. Traffic within the ancient city had lessened to an occasional passing car as the day tourists were lining up beyond the Puerta de Bisagra for the bumper to bumper trip back to Madrid. Passersby nodded and smiled, "Buenas tardes." The onslaught of tourists was over for another day. Toledo belonged to the toledanos again.

That evening we dined on gazpacho and roast sucking pig at the Hostal del Cardenal in an alfresco setting reminiscent of the gardens of the Alhambra. We lingered over the sobremesa, the unburied coffee and conversation that is the most important part of any Spanish meal.

Returning to the parador, we had our first look at Toledo by night. It was magic. Sky and earth were shrouded of deep blue velvet and on center stage was Toledo, glistening with the floodlit Alcazar, the cathedral, the ancient bridges, the "church of the chains." The town seemed just an arm's length away, so close we could see the glow of each individual street-light, catch the barking of a solitary dog in the darkness.

In the morning Toledo was empty of tourists until 10:30 or so when the first of the buses began rumbling in. Exploring the dimness of the majestic cathedral's cloisters, Bob found the best buys in hand-made fountains were at a corner stand by the ticket booth. We wandered alone through the splendors of the Fuensalida Museum, pausing in the deserted central patio with its formal garden. Later, from across the street, a woman beckoned us into a touristy store and, against our better judgment, talked us into looking at the usual array of Damascus, botas and woven wool capes in bright colors.

Driving from there to the Moorish grandeur of the Puerta del Sol, we parked on an incline so steep that it seemed prudent to wedge a large rock under one back wheel before walking up several flights of steps to one of Toledo's almost forgotten gems. Tucked away near some Roman ruins is a tiny church built originally by the Visigoths, who occupied the area from the fifth to eighth centuries. The church was transformed by the Moors, who ruled Spain from A.D. 712 to 1085, into a minute version of the great mosque in Córdoba. With the Christian reconquest of Spain in 1492, the mosque was consecrated as a church again, El Cristo de la Luz. Although the church is open day and night, services are rarely held and few people visit it. We had plenty of time to examine the Arabic columns and, by looking closely, we could still see traces of fifth-century Visigoth frescoes on the walls.

No new buildings may be erected inside Toledo's walls unless they conform strictly to the prevailing architecture—Moorish with Gothic flourishes. Therefore, the modern apartment houses, condominiums and stores have to be built in the suburbs.

In the western suburbs, a 10-minute drive from the center of town, is the National Arms Factory (Fabrica Nacional de Armas), created in 1777, where exacting artisans make fine replicas of age-old swords such as those used by El Cid. The going rate for a handmade sword—about $750—was beyond our budget but Bob happily browsed through the display room of ancient weapons, some dating to the prehistoric Celtic-Iberians.

From the Michelin Guide we learned there was a castle at Guadamur, just nine miles outside Toledo's walls, that was the residence of the Marquess de Campoo. Since we were castle collectors, it was a must. Bumping up the dirt streets to the 15th-century fortress where Isabella's unfortunate daughter, Juana la Loca (Joan the Mad), spent her honeymoon, we came to a dead end at a huge double wooden door set in a high stone wall. Apparently no one, Spaniard or tourist, read the Michelin because there was no one in sight except for a Guardia Civil at his station next door.

"Buenos días." The Civil Guard greeted us with a smart salute. "¿El consillo? Just push open the gate and ask for Paulino. He is the caretaker and he lives inside to the right."

Paulino wasn't there—he was at his store, wherever that might be—but his wife was. She sent her shy 13-year-old daughter, Maria del Sagrario, to lead the way on a guided tour for two.

Maria took us up a pine-dotted hill to the dry, iris-planted moat and then across a drawbridge where she produced an enormous key to open the entry to the castle proper. As we stepped through, I looked up at the rusting portcullis and hoped it hadn't corroded to the danger point. Inside was a small garden encircling the restored castle, which was furnished with authentic 16th-century pieces. Among them was the longest, most swayed-backed dining table I'd ever seen, as well as copies of ancestral portraits from the Prado Museum. There was a secret staircase, of course, but more intriguing of all, the small chapels of each bedroom had been converted into modern bathrooms with sunken tubs. The castle even had central heating.

When Maria was asked where her father's store was, she pointed across the packed-clay street outside the main gate and said, "Allá." It turned out to be a junk shop beyond a collector's wildest dreams. For years now Paulino had been scouring the countryside around Toledo, looking for items that families wanted to dispose of. Along with the worthless junk he acquires this way, he often strikes pay dirt. We saw stacks of gold-leafed altar pieces, dusty piles of 17th-century books, brass-studded leather chests dating back to the early 1800's, and, in a barn where the hay-strewn floor bore recent evidence of goats and sheep, a collection of 100-year-old, hand-carved convent chairs that were discarded because the nuns preferred chrome and formica.

"We ate lunch at a mason (restaurant) near the castle and made our first mistake of the day, ordering perdiz, Toledo's regional specialty. It turned out to be highly pickled bird and—for us, at least—totally inedible. Afterwards Bob and I roamed the tiny village, talking to the black-garbed men who sat around the decrepit central plaza while their black-clad wives hurried on their endless chores. Through the old men, we found the Guadamur was home to the last of a dying breed, a man who made copies of 16th century armor by hand, alone. "Just go up this street and halfway up the hill and you'll see a big door," they advised us.

Another door. But this one opened not to a castle, but to a walled yard with chickens and goats and lamb and dogs and, to one side, a well-worn shanty, the armor maker's workshop.

Higinio Lorente, looking stronger and younger than his 77 years, learned his trade from a holtermaker in his youth. Living in the shadow of a castle, it seemed natural that he make armor, not metal pots. Using a wooden stand as a sort of dressmaker's dummy, he has been turning out complete suits of armor with special home-made tools for the past 57 years. His works from 12 to 14 hours a day usually with an old crows or two in companionship, creating no more than three full suits a year. His 150 one-of-a-kind originals stand in the castle. Palma de Mallorca, the Alcazar Segovia and in private collection.

On several subsequent trips, the Parador became our home away from home as we explored the nearby cities of Barcelona, Maqueda and Escalona and ventured into La Mancha the hilltop of Consuegra with its illuminated castle and ancient Don Quixote windmills. And, despite the guidebooks' warnings, each time we'd turn weighed down with precious finds—a pair of the priceless convex chairs, some 200-year-old leather-bound books—which now, an odd away, evoke Toledo and its special charm.

In Salt Lake City— The Founder's Legacy

gently, with reproductions of the original lush carpets and drapes, and much of Brigham's own beautifully shaped and carved furniture. The desk in Brigham's office, it is said, was fashioned from the hardwood that crossed the Rockies as part of his Conestoga wagon.

The Lion House is where most of Brigham's wives lived. The domestic arrangements were not always harmonious. The dissidents were sent off to homes Brigham kept elsewhere in the valley, many of which are still standing.

Not many years ago the Mormon Church was extremely sensitive about its patriarchs' excursions into polygamy, which had continued to rankle Americans though it was terminated by decree in 1890. It is less sensitive now, and the guides in Brigham's houses speak of it openly, though sometimes evasively.

Officially, the church keeps the Lion House as a meeting center, off-limits to tourists, but if the day is not too busy Mormon women attendants, with a kind of 1930's demureness, will often allow a peek at the wives' quarters upstairs. (Admission to all Mormon historical shrines is free.) The rooms, off both sides of a single hall, are tiny. The attendants acknowledge that Brigham had 19 wives, but some authorities say 27, and less friendly sources say many more.

The gossip about Brigham (and local Mormons still gossip about him) is that each night after dinner he went upstairs and chalked an "X" on the door of the room in which he planned to sleep. Often, it is said, an enterprising wife would erase the "X" on a rival's door and put it on her own.

And, yet, why did Brigham have a bed in his downstairs office, where his bowler hat and cane currently lie? The attendants mumble something about his having to be available to receive visitors early in the morning. But the gossips say that he really didn't like his wives at all, and usually slept alone.

A few years ago it was practically impossible to find the overgrown site where Brigham and several of his wives were buried. This spring, after months of work, the church unveiled a park it has built around Brigham's grave at First Avenue between State and A Street. The marker bears no epitaph, though several nearby monuments extol his triumphs. Not a word, however, is said about the several ladies who lie uncomplainingly in the earth near him.

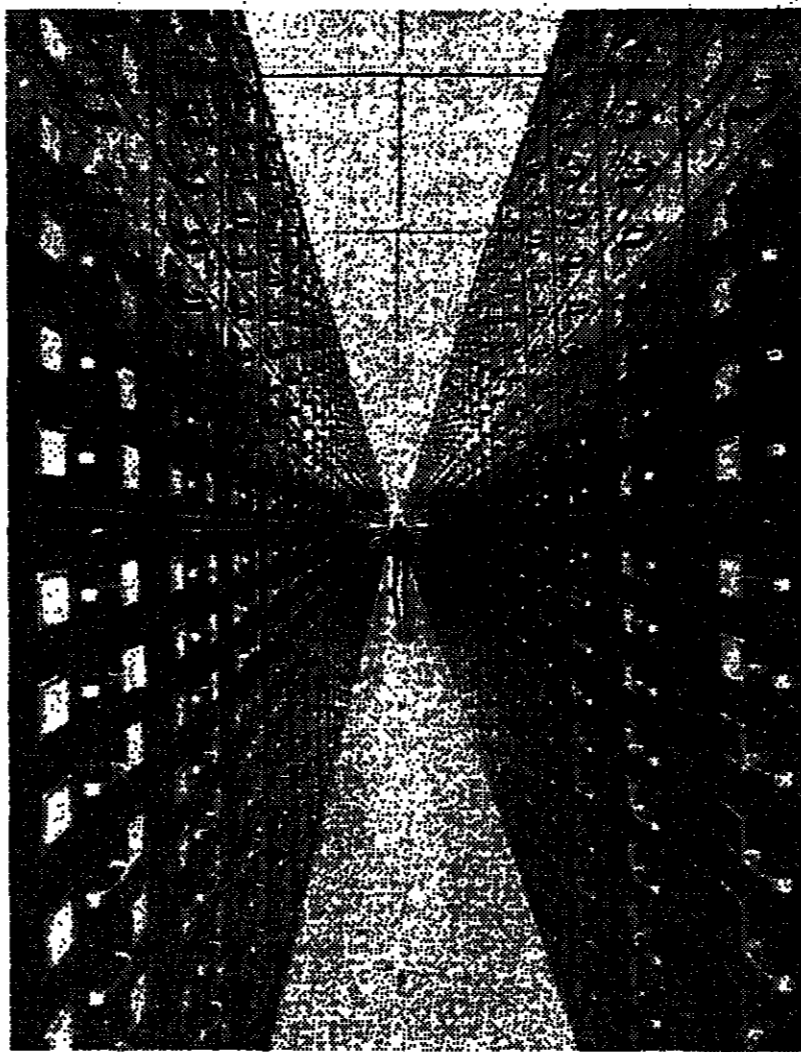

The most magnificent monument to Brigham is Temple Square, a complex of a half-dozen buildings begun in his reign to celebrate Mormonism. The buildings, amid flowers and fountains, occupy 10 acres and are girded by a high stone wall.

Being a modern people, the Mormons have put technology at the service of their faith, but at the new visitor center within the wall the two mix badly. The center tries to explain Mormonism's complex theology with an audio-visual display. A sequence of murals, in the style of socialist realism, is linked to flashing lights and somber voices, and the whole is meant to exude pure spiritualism. The result, however, seems more like Jesus in Disneyland.

Yet the center's bad taste is almost expunged by the soaring neo-Gothic temple of somber gray stone a few steps away. Its two spires—one of them bearing a golden statue of the angel Moroni, believed by members of the faith to be the bearer of Mormonism's doctrines from God—command the city and the valley with a kind of timeless majesty.

Only the holiest of ceremonies—ordinations, marriages, the preparations for eternal life—are performed in the temple. Only the truest believers may enter. Sixteen such temples serve the faithful around the world, but this is the most sacred of the shrines.

Next to the temple is the famous Mormon Tabernacle, site of the celebrated 10,000-pipe organ and home of the 375-voice Mormon Choir. Every Sunday since 1929 a concert has been broadcast from the tabernacle over network radio. The broadcasts are open to visitors at 9:25 A.M., as are rehearsals at 7:30 P.M. on Thursdays. In addition, organ recitals are held every day at noon and at 4 P.M. on Sundays.

One of the tenets of Mormon theology which Brigham brought over the mountains with him holds that families are linked in heaven for "time and all eternity"—which is translated to mean that a Mormon has an obligation to arrange the temple baptism of his ancestors. To establish who these ancestors are, Mormons have acquired an obsession with genealogy.

To satisfy this obsession, the Mormon Church spends $10 million a year (church income has been estimated at $3 million a day, from business profits and tithing, which would rank it among the nation's 50 largest corporations) to maintain and provide the resources for the largest genealogical library in the world.

The library currently occupies four floors and an entire wing of the new 28-story office building in downtown Salt Lake City from which the church directs its various enterprises. It also has genealogical records stored in deep granite vaults carved out of a mountainside near the city as a precaution against natural or man-made catastrophes. The Mormon Church takes genealogy seriously.

The library, however, offers all of its services free, to Mormon and non-Mormon alike. Some 6,500 people a week are said to use it. Many visitors, both American and foreign, spend their entire vacations in a search for ancestors. The library is open from early morning to late evening every day to accommodate the genealogical crowd.

Though the ghosts of yesterday's lesser Mormons might be restricted to the library, in Salt Lake City Brigham is everywhere. His admonitions to Mormon women to keep busy take tangible form in the downtown headquarters of the Relief Society, offices of the largest women's service organization in the world. Volunteers in gingham guide tourists through a sequence of exhibits—some of them actually live classrooms—on Mormon education ranging from Bible study to child care to canning and sewing.

On Welfare Square, in a poor neighborhood in the western end of the city, is the local distribution center for free food and clothing, as well as headquarters of a network of farms, factories, dairies and canneries in the valley where the food for the welfare program is grown and processed.

Where Brigham is missing, ironically, is in areas that many Americans tend to identify most directly with Mormons. Brigham was a lusty fellow, who knew a good wine when he tasted it, and he was looked upon as a theological revolutionary. But in the century since his death the flock has become increasingly conservative. Its theology is determined by a dozen old men, and its social practices have become increasingly austere. Mormons do not drink, smoke, take coffee or tea or think impure thoughts—or at least they are not supposed to. The result is restaurants without booze, a picket line in front of the X-rated movie house and sidewalks which, so to speak, roll up at night.

If there is a major institution in Salt Lake City that escaped Brigham's hand—and, in fact, was decidedly anti-Mormon at its founding—it is the United States Army base called Fort (for Stephen A. "The Little Giant") Douglas.

In response to the persecution of Mormons in the East, Brigham had clearly intended to make the Utah territory—which he designated "Deseret," a Mormon word which fittingly means "honey bee"—into an autonomous land. After repeated reports of harassment of non-Mormons in the territory, and even some killings, the Federal Government in 1857 sent in troops. The Mormons responded by pulling in their more remote settlements and preparing to fight.

The worst incident was the Mormon massacre of a 120 members of a wagon train on route to California. Mormon and non-Mormon alike were horrified by the killing which, according to many historians, the church "explained" by turning over one of its leaders to the Federal Government for trial and execution. The "Mormon War" thus ended, but the animosity lingered on much longer.

Fort Douglas was established in 1862, ostensibly out of concern for Confederates and Indians, but in reality to keep an eye on the determined, and occasionally, ferocious followers of Brigham Young.

It still stands, serving local reserve units, not far from the "This is the Place" monument. It is a fine old encampment, with the original brick stable and barracks of the enlisted men, the fine stone Victorian homes of generations of officers and a filigreed octagonal bandstand where drums have rolled for more than a century.

This year, to encourage visitors, Fort Douglas opened a museum in one of its original officers' homes. It celebrates the fort's involvement with Indians as well as assorted outlaws and foreign powers. But mostly it is a relic of a largely forgotten episode in American history, a little civil war.

The animosity of Brigham's day has faded now, but some students of Mormon culture say that the feeling of beleaguement will never completely disappear. Others say that this very feeling has made Mormons a society of achievers. Whatever the explanation, Mormons have a special little community in America—and it began with this special man named Brigham.

"I'll tell you how good this tour is. I'd take it again."

by Mrs. Hazel Walker, Tourist

"I'd like to see all these different countries again."

"Where should I go next time? That's been my first thought at the end of every tour I've ever taken. But the 16-day Orient Enchantment Tour on Philippine Airlines was different. It only cost about $1200, and we were treated like the most important people in the Orient."

There are so many things I'd like to go back and see again. The bargain shopping in Manila was fantastic. And what food! We went to the special Gala Mahabuhay dinner in Manila with native entertainment and stuffed ourselves silly for 4½ hours. I'll never forget it. Al's waistline hasn't forgotten it either. I loved the Tiger Balm Garden in Singapore, and the temples in Bangkok and Hong Kong. Al is saying, 'Hazel, I never thought we'd see anything as beautiful as this.' And believe me, Al's no romantic. The only thing I'm going to do different next time is stay for 21 days, so we'll also get to spend some time in Japan and Taiwan.

This all means that Al and I can't wait to take the Orient Enchantment Tour again. It also means that anybody who takes a tour can judge how good it is. All they have to do is ask themselves one simple question: Would they go back on it again?"

Next Fall and Winter, we have four cruises from San Francisco and Los Angeles to a place where life is warm and gentle.

The South Pacific. You'll see Tahiti. With its lush green forests, warm blue lagoons, soft white beaches and beautiful golden people. You'll see Moorea, where the Tahitians go to get away from it all. And Bora Bora, which is probably the most beautiful little island in the world. We'll take you to Tonga, where the natives walk on fire. To New Zealand. Where you'll visit a Maori village. Explore a cave lit by glowworms. And cruise up a fjord. You'll spend a couple of days in big, friendly Sydney. You'll see kangaroos, Koalas. And all kinds of this huge continent's unique wildlife. Then you sail home across 10,000 miles of blue Pacific, stopping at Fiji, Samoa and Hawaii. And there's a 69-day Circle Pacific cruise in February that lets you see all this plus the Orient: Bali, Singapore, Hong Kong, Nagasaki, Kobe and Yokohama (Tokyo). Your ship is the all First Class Royal Viking Star or Royal Viking Sky. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit. Designed to bring you all the comforts of a great hotel. Even in the middle of the Pacific. Your stateroom will be big and comfortable, with a sweeping view of the sea. (94% of all passengers have outside staterooms.) The dining room is set high on an upper deck, walled with windows, and large enough to serve every passenger on board at a single, relaxed seating. At dinner, you can choose from specialties like Steak au Poivre, Sydney Rock Oysters, Tahitian Pamplemousse.

And you'll be well taken care of, since there are three crew members for every five passengers. There's more to do on board than you'll find at most great resorts. There's skeet shooting. A gym. A sauna. A heated pool. You can play bridge. Take in the lectures in our enrichment program. Catch a film in the ship's theatre. And every evening at sea, there's a whole variety of live entertainment in our bars and lounges. All four cruises begin in San Francisco and Los Angeles. There's a 50-day South Seas cruise in late October, 1976 and a 45-day South Seas sailing that begins in mid-January, 1977. The 69-day Circle Pacific cruise sails early in February, 1977. There's also a 32-day Christmas/New Year voyage to three of the most popular winter cruising areas; Mexico, Tahiti and Hawaii. For complete information—and reservations—see your travel agent. "There's no luxury like French luxury—ask any Francophile."

—Gene Kelly

A posh week in Paris. 4-star Sofitel hotel, air fare and more. From $459.

"For centuries, French chateaux, cuisine and fashion have defined luxury. So it's no surprise that when it comes to modern luxury—in a hotel—the French again lead the way."

Air France has a posh deal that lets you experience modern luxury in Paris—its $459* Parisian Holiday. This holiday includes your week's stay at the brilliantly designed, innovative 4-star Sofitel Paris. The Sofitel Paris offers—to mention just a few things—enclosed roof top pool, sauna, movie theaters, restaurants, discotheque, deluxe rooms with world-wide direct phone dialing and a number of other technical breakthroughs. And all conceived with a flair for luxury that's historically French.

Another Parisian Holiday offers a different facet of French luxury—the 4-star Sofitel Bourbon. Centrally located in Paris, the Sofitel Bourbon is a hotel in the old tradition of the small, intimate luxury hotel. Only $499*

Included in both holiday packages are your roundtrip air fare between New York and Paris, continental breakfast every morning, transfers and portage between airport and hotel, sightseeing and a good deal more.

For complete information, speak to your travel agent. Or call Air France Travelthèque (212) 759-9550.

A Kelly tip: One facet of luxury hasn't changed—the hotel concierge. He's Mr. Know-it-all. Introduce yourself. It's like having the luxury of your own personal secretary to handle restaurant reservations, theatre tickets and the like.

makes it easy to get there.

*Prices based on 7/8-day G.I.T. economy excursion air fare and double occupancy. Air France arranges the group and offers alternate departure dates if group not formed. Prices include $3 Federal Airport tax. For seasonal price variations and tour restrictions see your travel agent or Air France. Air fare subject to change and Government approval.

When your vacation at Club Med Guadeloupe, the best things in life are free. That's because the initial price you pay includes all the free activities you see here. And many more you don't see. All you pay extra for are drinks at the bar. (And even there tipping is not allowed.)

What's more, you have a choice of two beautiful locations on Guadeloupe. A week's stay at Caravelle, with its famous Antilles beach, costs as little as $555 including airfare.* And a week at the smaller, more intimate Fort Royal, with kids' mini-club, costs the same.

For more information, call your travel agent. Or fill in the coupon below and we'll send you our brochure, on the house.

All in all, there are so many free things to enjoy at Club Med you may come back spent. But your money won't.
